One Man Killed and Two Seriously Injured in Chicago Street Riot. Another Attempt to Effect Settlement.

CHICAGO, [illegible] was killed and two others dangerously wounded today by deputy sheriffs who were guarding nonunion drivers of express wagons.

The dead:

FREDERICK HUCKSOLD, teamster, shot through the heart by Charles Hillman, deputy sheriff.

Frank Davis was fatally wounded by Frank Armstrong, [illegible] of American Express wagon. Armstrong fired [illegible] Davis [illegible] passing entirely through his body. Armstrong was arrested.

William White, teamster, shot [illegible] by Charles Hillman.

The shooting of White and Hucksold occurred this afternoon at the intersection of Van Buren and Canal streets. The express wagon in charge of Hillman and William Moore was blockaded by a number of union teamsters and White, who was one of them, called the deputies a number of names. [illegible] under arrest and a fight [illegible]. Other teamsters ran up to [illegible] White and were assaulting Hillman and Monroe when the former drew his revolver and fired several shots. One of these struck White in the side, inflicting a serious wound and another passed through the heart of Hucksold, who had jumped from his seat in a [illegible] car to watch the fight just in time to meet the bullet from Hillman's revolver.

Negotiations for the ending of the teamsters strike were reopened late this afternoon [illegible] Monday a conference will be held between the strikers and J. V. Farwell, Jr., who has been delegated to act in matters of this kind for the employers. President Shea of the Teamsters union will not be a member of the committee which will meet Mr. Farwell nor will any of the members of the old strike committee which was friendly to President Shea.

It is possible that unless an agreement is reached on Monday a strike of the freight handlers employed in the railroad freight depots will result on July 1. This strike will be the result of the refusal of the freight handlers to touch goods hauled to the depots by nonunion men. At present the freight handlers are bound by a contract which compels them to handle it, but this agreement expires July 1.

All of the freight handlers are asking for an increase in wages amounting to about 10 per cent. No action has been taken on the demand by the railroads as yet but the freight handlers are of the opinion that a strike, while the teamsters trouble is still on, will aid both unions materially in obtaining what they want. The officers of the freight handlers union, are, however, strongly opposed to a strike, and President Flannery, of the Freight Handlers union, declared tonight that he had strong hopes of reaching an adjustment with the railroads without having a strike.

The strike situation before the grand jury developed nothing new. Promises are still made by State's Attorney Healy that a great sensation is forthcoming but he declines to discuss the details.

FIRST GOVERNMENT IRRIGATION SYSTEM FORMALLY DEDICATED

RENO, Nev., June 17.—The train bearing the congressional irrigation committee and guests was met here today by hundreds of Reno people eager to give a hearty welcome to the men who represent the government in the work of reclamation. In the party were Governor Pardee and Senator Frank Flint, of California, and Governor John Sparks and Senator George Nixon, of Nevada. A car containing prominent citizens of this state was attached to the special and after a short stop here, the journey was resumed.

Water Turned In.

The big diverting dam on the Truckee about 20 miles east of here, where the main canal begins, was the first objective point. There the party was taken in charge by Engineer L. H. Taylor, who has represented the government throughout the entire work. The gates of the dam were lowered and those of the canal opened. The great flood poured into the huge ditch and the reclamation project in Nevada was formally dedicated. When the gates of the river dam were lowered the bed of the stream below was dry in an instant, and the party found diverting sport in catching the large Truckee trout that were floundering on the rocks.

At Construction Camp.

From the dam the party was driven along the bank of the canal to Derby where the construction camp was located while the work was in progress. There the train was boarded, the next stop being at Hazen. From there the visitors were driven to the Carson river where the main canal ends and where is situated the great storage reservoir, by means of which sufficient water to irrigate thousands of acres in the Carson sink will be impounded.

The committee was highly satisfied with the work that has been accomplished. Some of the members admitted that they had never realized the extent of the work until they saw that great ditch with its dams and tunnels and laterals covering over 31 miles of country.

HAZEN, Nev., June 17.—Mrs. Francis G. Newlands, wife of United States Senator Newlands, of Nevada broke a bottle of champagne over the headgates of the canal on the Truckee river, two mile above Debery today.

The headgates lifted and a stream of mountain water poured into the canal in its course to the valley and the first step in making the arid west habitable was celebrated on the third anniversary of the national reclamation act.

In addition to the members of the national irrigation committee there were present the leading officers of Nevada and California. The principal address was made by Senator Newlands.

50,000 Acres Redeemed.

The initial irrigation system will be used to distribute water over about 50,000 acres of land. During the next two years the system will be extended to cover 150,000 acres more. This will increase the total distributing system to a length of 1,200 miles.

Arrangements are now being made to construct a regulating [illegible] the mouth of Lake Tahoe. As [illegible] of land is brought under [illegible] the demand for water [illegible] of six other dams on the Truckee river and its tributaries will be constructed and four reservoirs will be built on the Carson river. One of the reservoirs will be 18 miles in length and will have a surface area of 11,000 acres.

How Land Can Be Obtained.

The method of obtaining the government land in the newly-irrigated area will be simple. The charge has been fixed by the secretary of the interior at a maximum of $26 an acre. This sum will not represent the purchase price of the land but a perpetual title to the water. The land itself will be homesteaded. Applications for the land are now being made to the land office at Carson City. The water right of $26 [illegible] payable in [illegible] equal installments and title will not lapse until two payments have been passed, which will give the homesteader the opportunity of passing over a hard year. The government will charge no interest on deferred payments but will probably [illegible] an incentive for prompt settlement.

The charge of $26 an acre is [illegible] of constructing the irrigation system [illegible] for a period of [illegible] that the charge [illegible] last payment [illegible] be required [illegible] additional charge.

Control to Pass to Users.

[illegible] turned over to the Water Users association [illegible] by the secretary of the interior. The government [illegible] continue to hold title to the [illegible] and will remain [illegible] affairs if [illegible] on the part of the Water Users association. The government [illegible] expense to build the [illegible] so that it will need [illegible] repairs and for this reason has [illegible] rock and cement walls where [illegible] would have sufficed for a few years.

[illegible] great Carson [illegible] was [illegible] by water courses [illegible] days. The [illegible] are [illegible] from which [illegible] brought. There are not enough stones in the entire [illegible] to build the foundation of a house. [illegible] and [illegible] possesses remarkable fertility.

YALE WINS THE CHAMPIONSHIP

NEW YORK, June 17.—Seventeen thousand spectators saw Yale win the third and deciding game for the baseball championship of 1905 between Yale and Princeton at the Polo grounds today. Yale's victory was somewhat unexpected but it was gained by a fairly good margin, the final score being 8 to 5 against the New Jersey collegians.

Princeton won the first of the series with a score of 18 to 2, and Yale won the second with a score of [illegible].

From the first to the seventh inning of today's game Princeton was unable to solve Jackson's delivery and Yale outplayed the New Jersey men at every point. [illegible] the Princetonians, encouraged by the songs and cries of their partisans, braced up. Score:

Princeton	[illegible]	5

SYSONBY WON TIDAL STAKES

NEW YORK, June 17.—James R. Keene's Sysonby, with Nicol in the saddle, won the Tidal stakes of [illegible] one mile and a quarter at Sheepshead Bay today.

Sysonby was in the best possible condition [illegible] worked [illegible] and the books made him a hot favorite at [illegible]. He ran the distance today in [illegible] which is a new record for the stake. Agile, paying even money for the place, was second and Carrigan, second choice, third.

The Tidal stake is one of the stake features of the Coney Island Jockey club. It was first run in 1896, and has been won by some of the greatest horses America has ever seen.

Perfect weather prevailed and [illegible] persons witnessed the racing.

FLOTO PAYS HIGH TRIBUTE TO NYE

PREDICTS SUCCESS FOR THE NEW MANAGER OF THE COLORADO SPRINGS BASE BALL TEAM

Otto Floto, in the Denver Post, comments on the retention of the baseball team in Colorado Springs and pays "Sim" Nye a tribute in the following words:

It will be good and cheering news to those interested in baseball to learn that Colorado Springs business men have [illegible] to the front and raised funds sufficient to tide the club over its present difficulties, and that it is as good as assured that Colorado Springs will continue to enjoy the sport.

"Sim" Nye is an experienced [illegible] in theatrical affairs. He has made a success in catering to the public [illegible] no better fitted person could have been selected to take a firm hold on the affairs of the club at the [illegible].

Of the ultimate success of the [illegible] there can be no [illegible] any [illegible] "new broom sweep clean."

If Nye can induce several thousand of the fans of that city to [illegible] holders the patronage will increase [illegible] fold. And then with it all the [illegible] of that town will [illegible] to the [illegible] of just how big a load Thomas F. Burns carried around on his shoulders for the [illegible] years to give Colorado Springs [illegible] high-class baseball. Then and not until then will Mr. Burns be appreciated.

Here is all kinds of success to "Sim" Nye and his associates, and let us hope the town will give them the [illegible] will be in the race.

AUTO RACE WILL FINISH THIS WEEK

Special to the Gazette.

ONTARIO, Ore., June 17.—The automobile transcontinental automobile race will be finished before the end of next week. Huss and Wigle, driving Old Scout, reached this city at noon today. They were met by James W. Abbott, representative of the office of public roads inquiry of the United States department of agriculture, who had instructions for the men as to the route to be followed through this state. Mr. Abbott said that a large car had just arrived here from Portland, having been brought to the Dalles, 100 miles by boat, there being no road that [illegible]. The chauffeur reported that the [illegible] were in an incredible condition until he struck the one which the racers are to follow. From that point he [illegible] along with little difficulty. He said that the only direct way for an auto to go to Portland under its own power is via Burges and Priceville. From there the boys will follow along the [illegible] river to Burnes. The roads [illegible] this country are not only bad but almost unknown and it is hard to say what intervenes between the intrepid racers and their goal.

COMPANY MUST PRODUCE BOOKS

Special to Sunday Gazette and Telegraph.

MILWAUKEE, June 17.—The General Paper company, sued by the government to determine whether it is a trust in restraint of trade, has lost its contention before the United States circuit court that it should not be compelled to produce its books to supply evidence in response to the prosecution's search. United States Circuit Judge Seaman rendered the decision.

Attorney James D. [illegible], representing the paper company, [illegible] will carry the [illegible] to the court of appeals without delay [illegible] the company probably will continue to resist the demands of the government's attorney pending a [illegible] decision.

Exercisers, dumb bells and other apparatus of the gymnasium were installed at the police headquarters yesterday for the use of the patrolmen.

Inspector Young yesterday granted a building permit to the Hastings Realty and Building company for the erection of a frame residence of five rooms and bath for Mrs. Louisa Coffin at 826 East Columbia street, to cost $1,500.

Five workers were added to the rock pile contingent at the city hall yesterday as the result of the session of the police court. K. E. Strohm was found guilty of being intoxicated and creating a disturbance and fined $25 and costs in default of which he will work for the city 14 days. A. J. Ross and [illegible] Boggs, found guilty of vagrancy, were given ten days each breaking rock and Sam Proudfoot was appointed for the same length of time for being drunk and disorderly. William Glendenning will work out a fine of $20 and costs for being intoxicated. Harry Jones and William Hope were allowed two hours to shake the dust of the city off their shoes.

FRANCE-GERMANY RELATIONS STRAINED

[illegible] advices reached Washington today from official sources regarding the Moroccan negotiations at Paris which, while they indicate that war between Germany and France is improbable, indicate the extreme delicacy of the situation. Berlin takes a much more optimistic view of the situation than Paris. Germany claims that the negotiations are proceeding with the utmost good will on both sides and with the probability of an early settlement of all existing difficulties. Paris also professes good will and a spirit of extreme friendliness, but is unable to foresee the outcome and is exceedingly anxious to find out "what is back of Morocco and what are Germany's real intentions."

This is the light in which the situation has been presented to Washington. Diplomatists here attach considerable significance to the promptness and frankness with which Emperor William and President Loubet have kept President Roosevelt informed of each development in the situation, and to the care which both have taken to present their respective positions in full at the White house.

In the event of the failure of Paris negotiations, an European ambassador tonight expressed the belief that the president may be called on for assistance. Both Germany and France, who are refraining from any direct effort to draw the United States into the matter, know informally that this government does not consider American interests in Morocco sufficient to warrant any initiative on the part of the president regarding the invitation of the sultan to the powers to participate in an international conference. American acceptance of that invitation will be on condition that the powers signatory to the Madrid convention are in favor of such a conference.

Both Germany and France however, are inclined to hope for sympathy from this country, Germany, on the ground of the emperor's demand for the open door in Morocco, will appeal to American commerce, and France, because of the action taken by this country in the Perdicaris case when the state department requested the good offices of the French government in securing the release of Perdicaris, the American citizen in Tangier, who was kidnaped by bandits last year.

Only the exaggerated reports to the effect that the two countries are on the verge of war has served to relieve the present reticence which has thus far been maintained above the negotiations.

At the French embassy no cablegrams had been received today about the negotiations but M. Jusserand, the French ambassador said:

"You may be sure that France is conducting these negotiations with sincerity and good faith. We earnestly hope for an early settlement."

The Associated Press is enabled to give a partial history of the Moroccan question and of the incidents which have led up to the present crisis. The trouble dates from the signing of the Anglo-French treaty April 4, 1904. That treaty includes a special arrangement between France and England regarding Morocco which Germany claims is in contradiction to Article 1 of the convention of Madrid, negotiated by the powers represented at the Madrid conference of 1880. What has especially offended Germany is the failure of France to inform her officially of the Anglo-French treaty. France claims that seventeen days before the treaty was signed the articles concerning Morocco were submitted to the German government and that no objection was raised to them. The Berlin government insists that it was practically ignored by France in the negotiation of this treaty and points to the fact that England as soon as the treaty was signed submitted the articles affecting Egypt to Germany for approval. These articles, which concerned the Egyptian debt, were approved at Berlin with certain reservations.

It is said the situation was helped by the manner of M. Delcasse when approached by Prince Radolin, the German ambassador at Paris.

M. Delcasse is said to have replied to the German envoy's inquiries:

"You will find that information in the yellow book."

Since that time it is understood on [illegible] occasions the German representatives at Tangier has intimated to the French minister the dissatisfaction of Germany with the French policy in Morocco and as long ago as last November the German emperor informed the sultan that he would recognize no [illegible] violation of the Madrid convention as was involved in the Anglo-French arrangement.

OPENING OF THE ELKS ROOF GARDEN THIS WEEK

The beautiful home of Colorado Springs lodge No. 309, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, will present a scene of gayety next Wednesday evening when the new roof garden will be opened for the first time.

The Elks band of 25 pieces will give a concert. A large selection of classic and popular music has been received and the band has been holding several rehearsals a week in preparation for the opening of the season. The concert to be given will be one of a series which will be given at intervals of one week throughout the summer. It will last for an hour and a half and will be followed by dancing in the spacious lodge room.

A number of special invitations have been issued to the Elks' friends and it is expected that many Colorado Springs society folk will join in the festivities incident to the opening of the band concert season and the roof garden. While it has not been definitely decided upon what evening the [illegible] take place [illegible] will be either Wednesday or Thursday. The exact date will be [illegible] early this week.

[illegible] design [illegible] lishing a roof garden [illegible] the [illegible] by [illegible] space within the inclosure is about 50x90 feet in dimensions and makes an ideal outdoor resort. Drop curtains have been placed so as to obscure the view of the [illegible] to be on the street [illegible] roof garden may be [illegible] on the first or main floor of the club house, or from the Cascade avenue side.

In one corner of the inclosure will be placed a movable platform which will be occupied by the band while giving concerts [illegible] of chairs will be arranged [illegible] for the guests.

[illegible] from the [illegible] number of [illegible] refreshments will be served [illegible] roof garden [illegible] dancing [illegible].

[illegible] arrangements for the opening event has been busily preparing for the function for several weeks. The inclosure is wired for electric lights and these will be installed [illegible]. For the first [illegible] has been [illegible] and [illegible] the garden into a fairyland scene.

WARFORD SUED FOR PRICE OF EIGHT GUNS.

Special to Sunday Gazette and Telegraph.

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 17.—The Morgan Hardware company today started suit against James Warford, who is now in the county jail under the serious charge of murder, asking for $167 due for eight guns. The suit was started before Justice of the Peace [illegible], who also issued an attachment for Warford's guns which were in the possession of Sheriff Edward Bell. The guns that Warford had secured on credit included two rifles, [illegible] Colts revolver [illegible] with 500 rounds of ammunition.

GIVEN TILL AUGUST 18 TO FILE BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Special to Sunday Gazette and Telegraph.

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 17.—A stipulation was made today between the attorneys in the case of Thomas Murray against J. K. Walsh whereby Murray will have until August 18 to file a bill of exceptions. The case involves an interest in [illegible] of the Forest Queen mine and was sometime ago decided in favor of Walsh by Judge Seeds in the district court. An appeal will be taken to the supreme court.

JAPAN GAINS ONLY FREEDOM OF CHINA

LONDON, June 17. The modern Trafalgar has closed a chapter in the terrible history of the late war. The Russian fleet has been shattered, but not as in the case of the Armada by "the breath of God," but rather by the prowess of man. And now our thoughts are turning towards the shining prospect of peace, and we ask ourselves: What is the result of this great war? What will its effect be upon the nations of Europe?

It is but a few years back that all eyes were turned upon China. The cupidity of western powers hankered after her great wealth. China was nursed like an invalid. She was falling fast to pieces when Japan took up her cudgels.

Japan foresaw the danger to herself should the integrity of China be meddled with, but when the Russian policy became openly one of aggression she knew that the hour had come to strike a blow.

So long as the Russians occupied Mukden danger was at hand. The armies of her great foe were overwhelming, but the fleets yet remained, and there was a chance, no matter how remote, which was yet a danger. At the end of this great war Japan has gained nothing save the freedom of China, and the freedom of China and the strength of Japan mean to Europe the best chance of peace.

HATZFELDT LIKES AMERICAN GIRLS

LONDON, June 17.—Princess Hatzfeldt has, after a long and rather trying struggle, brought her husband to a very fair state of subjugation.

As all London knows, Prince Hatzfeldt is the most inveterate gambler, gambling with him is a disease, and was recognised as such by the late Mr. C. P. Huntington, the father of the princess. By dint of cutting down his allowance, immediately he showed signs of breaking out, the unruly prince was often checked in his wild career, but he cost his father-in-law a fortune.

Now, however, the princess by the exercise of much tact has actually succeeded in "chaining him up" at Draycott, their place in the country, whenever he shows a disposition to break loose.

The Derby week was of course a dangerous period, so the princess kept her husband down at Draycott while she herself went to the races for the big day only, leaving a small house party at Draycott to amuse the prince, who is particularly partial to bright American girls.

The princess tells her friends she can always keep her husband away from temptation if she surrounds him with American girls and genial young spirits.

MANY AMERICANS VISITING IN LONDON

LONDON, June 17.—Mrs. Clay Evans, the wife of the ex-consul general for the United States in London, and her daughter, are making the best of their remaining time in England by paying a series of country house visits before they are off to Paris, where Miss Clay-Evans intends to study French thoroughly before returning to America in the fall.

The majority of pilgrim Americans now in London seem to want to stay here a good deal more than they used to, and put off the inevitable visit to Paris until the last moment before returning home.

The Berkley, Claridge's, the Savoy and the Cecil hotels are packed with transatlantic visitors. At the first named hotel Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hoyt Smer and Miss Mortimer, of New York, have taken one of the best suites for several weeks and have already given several small dinners in the restaurant.

WEDDING TRIP TO BE MARKED BY NAVAL HONORS

STOCKHOLM, June 17.—The honeymoon trip of Prince Gustav Adolph and Princess Margaret of Connaught on their journey to Sweden will be marked by naval honors. From Copenhagen to Helsingborg the bridal couple will be escorted by a Danish cruiser and torpedo boats and the Swedish coast squadron.

From that city they will proceed by rail to Nyssas, [illegible] probably paying a visit to their [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] on the Swedish coast of the Sound opposite Elsinore.

From Nyssas they will travel by the royal yacht "Drott" with an escort of torpedo boats to Stockholm, where they will be saluted by a squadron of battleships.

MADE INSTANTLY—THE MOST DELICIOUS COFFEE YOU EVER TASTED

Special Demonstration this week of the "EXCERPTA" Coffee Pot—perfect coffee served FREE to all basement visitors. Take Elevator.

Style A.

THE "EXCERPTA" Coffee Pots are made in two styles, three sizes in each style. Style A is made of 18 oz. copper, seamless body, heavily tin lined and nickel plated. The handle and knobs are of ebony and are always cold. Style C is made of 18 oz. copper, swaged body, double seam bottom, tin lined and heavily nickel plated. Handle and knob of enameled wood, securely fastened and always cold. We guarantee the "Excerpta" Coffee Pots will not rust or corrode.

The "EXCERPTA" is perfectly simple in its construction. There are no complicated attachments. Anyone, even a child old enough to lift a kettle of boiling water, can make delicious coffee in the "EXCERPTA"; no one who follows the directions can fail to do so, and the instant the boiling water is poured into the trap the coffee is ready to serve.

Let us enumerate some of the distinguishing features of an "EXCERPTA."

It makes coffee instantaneously.
It preserves the aroma absolutely.
It extracts the entire strength.
It has no parts to get out of order.
It develops the flavor.
It saves 25 per cent in coffee.
It produces perfect coffee every time.
It is simple in operation.
It retains the heat.
It is made of durable materials.

and is withal a beautiful coffee pot in which to make and from which to serve.

DIRECTIONS FOR MAKING COFFEE IN THE 'EXCERPTA' ARE PERFECTLY SIMPLE, AS FOLLOWS:

Place finely ground coffee in sack. Affix trap and pour boiling water through hole in top. Put on lid. THAT'S ALL. The coffee is made and the best coffee too that you ever drank.

STYLE A.		STYLE C.
2 quarts	$2.50	2 quarts	$1.75
2 pints	2.00	2 pints	1.40
1 pint	1.75	1 pint	1.25

With the "EXCERPTA" coffee can be made at the table as well as in the kitchen, anywhere where you have boiling water, and as no steam escapes the beverage remains hot throughout the meal. Just consider this feature again, "remains hot throughout the meal." No sending of the coffee pot back to the kitchen to be kept hot and possibly be placed upon the stove where it may be forgotten and allowed to boil to the ruination of the pot, the coffee and stomach alike. Out to the "EXCERPTA," it stays hot, right at the table, and your second cup is as hot and delicious as the first. Just think of it!

S[illegible] THE HAGUE

Russia Said to be Endeavoring to Reopen Question of Place for Peace Conference.

N[illegible] A[illegible]VIS[illegible]

ST. PETERSBURG, June 17—7:09 p. m.—The question of the place of meeting of the Russian and Japanese representatives has been reopened and there is a possibility that The Hague, instead of Washington, may be selected.

After the announcement that Washington had been selected, Russia expressed a desire to have the selection reconsidered, and exchanges to that end are now proceeding between Foreign Minister Lamsdorff and Ambassador Meyer and Washington.

Russia's preference for The Hague is based on the obvious advantages that it is entirely neutralized, the capital of a small state and the site of the arbitration court, and also in consideration of time.

WASHINGTON, June 17.—Impressive in dignity and number will be the missions which Russia and Japan will send to the Washington conference, for although the plenipotentiaries will be limited to two or three, the complete missions with their advisers and attaches and secretaries will each, it is expected, number twelve or more persons. Japan's plenipotentiaries probably will be accompanied by an army and a navy officer of high rank who will act as military advisers to the plenipotentiaries. In addition there will be secretaries and attaches, some of them from the diplomatic service, some from the foreign office and others who will act as translators and recording secretaries. Russia probably will send a similar mission, though perhaps not so large, and both the Russian ambassador and the Japanese minister at Washington will place at the disposal of the respective missions their secretaries and attaches.

Offices Not Selected.

The Washington government will furnish a suitable place of meeting for the conference and as soon as a date for its convening is fixed, arrangements for quarters for the two missions will be made by the Russian and Japanese envoys here. There have been so many other details to be settled, that the state department has not yet fixed up offices for the conference.

STEAMING OUT SPLINTERS.

When a splinter has been driven into the hand it can be extracted by steam. Fill a wide-mouthed bottle nearly full of hot water, place the injured part over the mouth and press it slightly. The action thus produced will draw the flesh down, and in a minute or two the steam will extract the splinter, also the inflammation. Try it and be convinced.—National Magazine.

Russia's Sinking of the British Ship Subject of Protest.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 17.—Strong representations are being made here this forenoon in behalf of Great Britain as a result of the sinking of the British steamers by the Russian auxiliary cruiser.

The British steamer St. Kilda was sunk by the Russian auxiliary cruiser Dnieper June 5 in the China sea and it was reported at the time of the battle of the Sea of Japan that the Russians sank a British steamer in the Straits of Formosa. Her name, however, has never been mentioned in the cable dispatches and it has been generally understood that the report grew out of the capture by the Russians of the British steamer Oldhamia, bound for Japanese ports from New York, March 8, via Hong Kong.

WILL NOT ENTER THE TRANS-ATLANTIC FIELD

LONDON, June 17.—A. S. Williams, manager of the Royal Mail Steam Packet company, in an interview with a representative of the Associated Press today said that the report that the company contemplated placing a line of passenger steamers between Southampton and New York was erroneous. He said that this service was already more than provided for and that his company would not attempt to compete with the big concerns now engaged in that trade.

NEW YORK RIFLEMEN OFF FOR SHOOT IN ENGLAND

NEW YORK, June 17.—The rifle team from the Seventh regiment, National Guard of New York, which will meet a team representing the Queen's Westminster volunteers in a competitive match at Bisley, England, on July 6 and 7, sailed on the steamer St. Louis today.

NOTED BRAZILIAN IN COLORADO TO INSPECT MOUNTAIN RAILWAYS

Senor J. J. De Silva Priere, superintendent of motive power for the railways owned by the government in Brazil and a resident of Rio De Janeiro, arrived this morning at the Antlers from the west. Senor De Silva Priere was a delegate to the recent International Railway congress at Washington, and came to Colorado to inspect narrow gauge railroads. He has just returned from Salida, where he has spent some time looking over the Marshall Pass line and the manner in which the locomotives pull the trains over the heavy grades.

When asked about railway conditions in Brazil he said, "I came up here to study railways in this country, and also to attend the recent congress. I have been out on the coast and after spending a few more weeks in this country I will inspect the lines in Europe.

"The American cars and locomotives are superior in construction to those of Europe. The locomotives can make better time and haul bigger loads on less coal than foreign ones, and we are using [illegible] in Brazil. But the roadbeds here are not nearly as safe or well constructed as those on the continent. Most of the railways in Brazil are narrow gauge, and owned by the government. We have a line running about 400 miles west of Rio, the greater part of which is narrow gauge.

"The government of Brazil [illegible] stable and satisfactory. [illegible] think of it we have not had a revolution for five years. [illegible] has been [illegible] South American who has to plead guilty to never fighting in a revolution."

Senor De Silva Priere [illegible] the weather [illegible] with the heat which is rather peculiar for one coming from Brazil, which in popular belief is so much warmer than Colorado.

SHEA AN[illegible]S A[illegible] [illegible]-CONS[illegible]RATO[illegible]S MAY [illegible]

Competitors of Montgomery, Ward & Co. Said to Have Paid $3[illegible] to Labor Leaders to Bring on Strike That Has Resulted in Taking of Human Lives.

TEAMSTERS ARE CUTTING LOOSE FROM SHEA

CHICAGO, June 17.—A demand for the settlement of the teamsters' strike is expected to be framed before night at a meeting of anti-Shea delegates in the teamsters' joint council. Several leaders of the drivers are alleged to have broken away from the strike leadership of President Shea, and arranged for a caucus at which they plan to canvass the situation and secure pledges enough for the calling off of the strike, and to go before the teamsters' joint council Monday with assurances of success. George F. Golden, who with a number of others was [illegible] Shea [illegible] developed today as the one who made the motion at the council providing for a new committee to be appointed at Monday night's meeting. Golden is the business agent of the Packing House Teamsters' union and former president of the Teamsters' Joint Council.

May be Held for Murder.

Admission is made by State's Attorney Healy that the grand jury has found important evidence apparently corroborating the report that the troubles, partly at least, the result of a conspiracy directed against the firm of Montgomery Ward & Co. by other employers, and by labor leaders involving the payment of $30,000 in installments of $10,000 and $20,000. If an indictment is voted as a result the alleged conspirators are likely to be charged with being responsible for one or more murders resulting out of attacks of so called "wrecking crews."

The law holds that when persons enter into a conspiracy to do an illegal act they are responsible for everything following the initial act, and that all can be held for acts of one [illegible] though they [illegible] knowledge of what the conspirators are doing or have done.

Are Tired of Shea.

Hugh Moore, formerly one of the [illegible] Shea openly advocated peace today.

"I know that [illegible] are acceptable to the majority of the small leaders and to the rank and file [illegible] offered a week ago by the employers [illegible] were reciprocated by a [illegible] member of the commercial exchange. The settlement proposed to be sure was considerable of a compromise for the teamsters, but under the circumstances it was a good one. The teamsters are getting tired of Shea's doings."

The question of [illegible] the strike has become more and more [illegible]. To pay the strike benefits and other expenses requires $30,000 a week. Since the grand jury investigation the shrinkage it is alleged has been large.

"If the joint council wants to name our new strike committee or ten new committees," said President Shea this afternoon, "it will not better the situation. The settlement of this teamsters' strike will be the same no matter how many committees work on it. [illegible] joint council [illegible] repeal the constitution of the Teamsters' Brotherhood. The arrest and conviction of every strike leader would not alter the situation a particle. [illegible] The men on strike must decide on a settlement or continuation of the strike."

CHICAGO, June 17.—Although the [illegible] of sensational developments in connection with the teamsters' strike were flying thick and fast yesterday, there was little tangible evidence to support them. Assistant States Attorney Lake declared yesterday that the [illegible] given before the grand jury [illegible] thousand years. The testimony given yesterday maintained the interest created by that of Thursday.

It is unofficially declared that the grand jury devoted much of its time listening to statements of witnesses who declared [illegible] strike against Montgomery Ward & Co. [illegible] by rival houses. States Attorney Healy said last night that the investigation has assumed a scope so extensive that the full session of the present grand jury, which is to continue for the next two weeks, will probably be finished before the inquiry is concluded, and that a special grand jury will be necessary to dispose of the routine cases now pending.

PRESIDENT TAKES UP SANTA [illegible] & [illegible] SCANDAL

WASHINGTON, June 17.—A long conference was held at the White House today, the president, Secretary Morton and Attorney General Moody being the participants. The conference related to the Santa Fe railroad rebate case which has been pending before the department of justice for several months. Secretary Morton is brought into the case by his admission on the witness stand that when he was vice president of the Santa Fe road, rebates were granted by that system to the Colorado Fuel and Iron company.

After the conference today, Mr. Moody said that a full statement of the case would be issued by him next Tuesday. At the same time President Roosevelt will make a statement of the position of the administration. While neither Secretary Morton nor Attorney General Moody would discuss the matter at this time, it can be said that the former has courted the fullest inquiry into his railroad transactions.

French Foreign Minister Thinks if Kaiser Would Say What He Hopes to Accomplish Conference Might be Agreed To.

PARIS, June 17.—The efforts to secure a diplomatic adjustment of the Franco-German controversy relative to Morocco remain without definite results and the negotiations while not suspended, make practically no progress. France has not given her final response to Germany's movement for an international conference and the officials do not conceal the German press reports that France has definitely rejected the proposal for a conference. For the present, Premier Rouvier is turning his efforts towards learning what Germany desires to accomplish by a conference and it is the view in official quarters that some of the chief objections to the conference may be removed by having its purposes exactly defined. In the meantime sentiment in high quarters remains most solicitous concerning the outcome of the negotiations and sinister reports circulate concerning the possibilities resulting from a complete failure to reach a diplomatic adjustment.

BERLIN, June 17.—5:55 p. m.—The foreign office has, the Associated Press learns, telegraphed to Prince Von Radolin, the German ambassador at Paris, during the last day or two in a sense that will be reassuring to French apprehensions if such were felt.

Germany still presses France diplomatically for her acceptance of the proposal to hold a conference of the powers on the subject of Morocco.

The undoubted disturbance of feeling in Paris over Germany's policy is not traceable to anything actually aggressive that the German government has done or is preparing to do. It is probably due to the feeling of weakness that has suddenly arisen in France since Admiral Rojestvensky lost the sea fight and the corresponding relative increase of German confidence since it has become evident that Russia need not for the present be reckoned with. The thought in the government, in the army and in the press is that Germany in a military sense has now become master of the continent and that being so, France and every other continental power should recognize that in diplomacy also Germany has a right to the first place and must be dealt with as the paramount power.

HOTTENTOTS LED BY ABRAHAM MORRIS CAPTURED GERMAN POST TOOK STORES BUT RELEASED MEN

CAPE TOWN, Cape Colony, June 17.—Confirmation has been received here of the report that insurgent natives recently captured Warmbad, German Southwest Africa, near the border of Cape Colony. The attacking force of Hottentots was led by Abraham Morris. They captured the place June [illegible] natives also captured Kalkfontein [illegible] looting the place and taking away all horses, cattle and provisions.

BIG DAY IN BOSTON TOWN

BOSTON, June 17.—Practically all the business activities of greater Boston were suspended today in observance of the anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill. The celebration centered as usual in Charlestown, the scene of the famous fight. There was a parade of the militia and bluejackets from the warships. Various outdoor events attracted large numbers of people.

FAIR PRODUCTION FROM MODOC MINE

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 17.—Shipments from that part of the Modoc mine under lease to the Bergdoff Leasing company are averaging 125 tons a month. The grade ranges from $30 to $50 [illegible] property and no little exploration is being engaged in [illegible] employed by the Bergdoff Leasing company.

JUDGE COTTON IS TO SUCCEED BELLINGER

WASHINGTON, June 17.—After a conference with President Roosevelt today Attorney General Moody announced that it had been decided to appoint Judge W. W. Cotton, of Portland, Ore., to the vacancy on the United States district bench, caused by the death of Judge Charles B. Bellinger, of the district of Oregon. Judge Cotton will not be required to qualify until September 1, as he has some important cases to close up before entering upon his new duties. It is not expected that Judge Cotton will try the land fraud cases which have been instituted by the government in Oregon. Judge DeHaven of California already has been assigned to the trial of those cases by Presiding Judge Gilbert of that circuit.

[illegible] ENORMITY OF COST

Russian Press and Public Declare Japan Must be Moderate or War Must be Prolonged. Much Dread of Humiliation.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 17.—The note of the foreign office announcing that the negotiations for the meeting of the Russian and Japanese plenipotentiaries were proceeding rapidly was printed without comment in the morning papers but the press of all shades of opinion is discussing Japan's probable terms [illegible] unanimity for a continuation of the war rather than the acceptance of humiliating conditions. In this the newspapers are [illegible] by public opinion which is veering around to support of the war policy if Japan's terms prove too hard. S[illegible] WAR GAME

FORT MONROE, Va., June 17.—The last half of the game between the army and navy ended at noon today, and eclipsed all engagements of the week in every feature of the spectacular possible in sham battle. The fleet under Admiral Dickins headed by his flagship Texas sailed in single column close to shore, passed every gun of Fort Monroe. Every ship of the fleet was in action at the same time and every gun of the fifteen ships was being served to the limit of rapidity. On the one side was Fort Monroe as a target and on the other Fort Wool. With equal energy and rapidity the forts replied. While the squadron was one that would be impossible in war, it depicted a scene which left nothing to the imagination in the realization of the magnificence of battle. Every effect was there except the effect of shells. Strategy and play for position and favorable conditions was abandoned that the inspiration of battle might be attained by the men behind the guns. The ships proceeded up Hampton roads after congratulations had been exchanged between Admiral Dickins and General Wade.

The finish of the war game began with an attack on Fort Monroe at dawn by the destroyers and gunboats of Admiral Dickins' fleet. Just between dark and daylight there is a brief period when conditions are most favorable for offensive naval operations, it being too light for the searchlights to be effectively operated and too dark to see without them.

These conditions were taken advantage of by Admiral Dickins this morning and three of his destroyers and two gunboats crept close to the walls of the fort before they were discovered.

An incoming steamship also gave protection to the mosquito flotilla, which banked itself in the lee of the big ship and floated close in [illegible] being seen. The fusillade was [illegible] lively and at its conclusion the [illegible] craft departed toward the [illegible].

BOLD ROBBERY IN HEART OF DENVER IN BROAD DAYLIGHT

Special to Sunday Gazette and Telegraph.

DENVER, Colo., June 17.—A bold robbery was committed in the pawn shop of Arnold Wolff at 1603 Larimer street shortly before 9 o'clock this morning, when a man who has often been a customer at the store, walked in and leveled two big guns in the faces of H. Garby and S. Hurowitz, clerks, and forced them to hand out the diamond tray. He took the most valuable stone in the tray and coolly walked to the sidewalk and then ran down the street to the alley and escaped. The stone taken was valued at $250.

He was caught by Patrolman John Cooper at about 10 o'clock. He made for his gun, but was not quick enough this time.

When asked where he got the pistols, he said that he needed breakfast money this morning and bought them to hold up the pawnshop. Chief [illegible] him why he did not spend the [illegible] he bought the guns with, and he replied: "Well, I don't like to [illegible] own money, you know."

RETURN OF "BOBBY AND MARIE FOUNTAIN."

The Marie Fountain company, with Bobby and Marie Fountain, [illegible] to Colorado Springs [illegible] tonight. The play [illegible] is a sensational [illegible] four acts entitled [illegible] City. The Fountains have just finished a successful two weeks' engagement in Denver, where the above named play proved to be one of the strongest drawing and most highly satisfactory offerings yet presented by the Fountains at either Colorado Springs or Denver. The cast will include Bobby and Marie Fountain, Wm. Echols, Harry Fernandez, Otto Oretto, Laura Helmlich, Marie Van Etten, F. Stuart, and all the old favorites. An unusually strong vaudeville feature during the week's engagement will be the first appearance here of the famous Shanty Town Trio. This trio includes three clever Irish comedians, singers and dancers, in a screaming one-act comedy, written expressly for them, entitled "Hogan's Happy Home." This is the strongest vaudeville feature ever brought here by either of the Fountain companies. This act has just concluded a successful run over the Orpheum circuit. The Denver press, as well as the press in other cities where they have appeared are unanimous in pronouncing "The Shanty Town Trio" one of the best vaudeville features playing the western circuit of theaters.

Otto Oretto will also appear in new and pleasing specialties.

The coming week should be a banner week for the Fountains as they are returning with excellent [illegible] vaudeville novelties. [illegible] orchestra will discourse some new and pleasing musical numbers. The Fountain band and orchestra is one of the best musical organizations [illegible] by a traveling company [illegible] the patrons of the [illegible]

ANNUAL PICNIC OF BOYS' CLUB

FIFTY ENTHUSIASTIC YOUNGSTERS SPEND ENJOYABLE DAY AT STRATTON PARK.

Yesterday was the most perfect day of the whole year. At least so said the fifty boys who spent yesterday in Stratton park and Cheyenne canon. They were the members of the Boys' club, and the occasion was their annual picnic, given them by the members of the board of directors of the Boys' Club association.

Long before 10 o'clock the happy youngsters gathered at their club rooms on South Tejon street to await for the car that the street railway company furnished them for the trip. When it did arrive there was a shouting, laughing and pushing [illegible] that climbed into the seats and from every corner of the [illegible]. They were accompanied by a number of the members of the board [illegible] by Mrs. William L. Riddle, the [illegible]

Shortly after 10 o'clock the boys reached the park [illegible] from one end to the other could be heard their happy chatter. At noon they assembled near the big pavilion and were served with [illegible] There were [illegible] and cake [illegible] and all sorts of good things, but best of all was the ice cream that came at the close of the feast.

There was no special program arranged for the afternoon, but the boys were allowed to enjoy themselves in their own way and were only together again at [illegible] o'clock, when reluctantly they were taken home after the very best day of the year.

A special session of the city council will be held Tuesday evening for the purpose of considering the proposed franchise to the Colorado Springs and Interurban Railway company for its new cemetery line.

The regular session of the city council will be held tomorrow evening for the allowing of the pay rolls and the consideration of routine business. Bids for the extension of the sewer system and the construction of cement conduits on the east side, according to the plans and specifications on file in the city engineer's office, will be opened and contracts awarded.

The bond ordinance for the [illegible] of $340,000 of sewer and water [illegible] bonds will be ready for passage and the new automobile ordinance will come before the council for further consideration.

Property owners on the block on Vermijo street between Tejon street and Nevada avenue will present a petition asking that the roadway be so repaired that the flood water will not drain upon the property of citizens living upon the south side of the street.

Street department affairs will probably receive another airing as the name of E. R. Croston, who was elected foreman by the council several weeks ago, [illegible] payroll, while [illegible] has had Mr. Fitz[illegible] of Richmond [illegible]

ROMANCE AT COLLEGE TO END IN WEDDING

A wedding of interest in Colorado Springs will be solemnized in Cheyenne, Wyo., next Wednesday, when J. D. Clarke of New York and Miss Marian Williams of Cheyenne are united in marriage.

Mr. Clarke entered Colorado college as a post graduate student early in 1899. He was an athlete of prowess and was soon in full charge of athletics at Colorado college. He turned out three successive championship baseball teams in 1899, 1900 and 1901. His rise has been phenomenal since leaving college, and today he is regarded by Andrew Carnegie as one of the most promising young men in his employ. He is private secretary to Secretary Fezer of the constituent companies comprising the Steel Trust.

Miss Williams was a student at Colorado college at the time of Clarke's career there and was one of the most popular young women who was ever graduated from the college.

Huge Task.

It was a huge task to undertake the cure of such a bad case of kidney disease as that of C. F. Collier, Cherokee, Ia., but Electric Bitters did it. He writes: "My kidneys were so far gone I could not sit on a chair without a cushion, and suffered from dreadful backache, headache and depression. In Electric Bitters, however, I found a cure and by them was restored to perfect health. I recommend this great tonic medicine to all with weak kidneys, liver or stomach. Guaranteed by all druggists; price 50 cents.

IN THEIR NEW STORE.

Pelta's Department store after having remodeled and refitted their North store are now occupying this entire building with ladies ready-to-wear garments.

This distinction, the occupying of one entire store first floor—with ladies' ready-made garments—suits, skirts and cloaks, etc., is enjoyed by no other firm in Colorado Springs.

The occupying of this new store became necessary owing to the general increased business of this firm and especially in the suit department.

Mr. Chas. Pelta, the popular buyer of ladies' ready-to-wear garments for his firm and who is giving almost his entire time and attention to this department, says that he expects to increase his business fully 50 per cent by reason of these large and commodious quarters for the better display and sale of all the merchandise.

This increase in business will more than justify the firm in its liberal expenditure of remodeling and refitting [illegible] The popular firm is [illegible] business methods [illegible] honest treatment of the public and its ability to fully supply the demands of its [illegible] of customers has built up one of the largest and most prosperous businesses in this entire community. Monday morning begins another one of their popular sales and from the standpoint of good value giving it will doubtless prove the greatest success of the season.

Our stock is too large, it must be reduced, prices no object. Robbins' on the corner.

WILD WEST FOURTH OF JULY FOR FOUNTAIN

Citizens of Fountain [illegible] are preparing for the city's usual large celebration of the Fourth of July. A program replete with interesting and exciting events has been arranged. Broncho busting, wild steer roping, cowboys and [illegible] racing, and foot racing of all kinds will be features of the day's entertainment. An automobile race will be run from Colorado Springs. Wild Bill will ride [illegible] steer fresh from the range. Music will be provided by a brass band all day and at night there will be a [illegible] display of fireworks. A [illegible] rate of one fare for the round trip will be made [illegible] railroads.

HAVE YOU A COUGH?

A dose of Ballard's Horehound Syrup will relieve it. Have you a cold? Try it for whooping cough, for asthma, for consumption, for bronchitis. Mrs. Joe McGrath, 327 East First street, Hutchinson, Kan., writes: "I have used Ballard's Horehound Syrup in my family for five years and find it the most palatable medicine I ever used." Sold by D. F. Monroe & Co.

HOME DAIRY OPENS

LARGEST RESTAURANT IN COLORADO OUTSIDE OF DENVER.

Next Tuesday morning Colorado Springs people can boast of having the largest and best equipped restaurant in the state with the exception of that of the Home Dairy in Denver, after which this restaurant is modeled.

Mr. W. [illegible] Jones will open the Colorado Springs Home Dairy restaurant at 20 East Huerfano street Tuesday. The building has been recently remodeled at an expense of several hundred dollars, the dining room [illegible] large and spacious, nicely finished and furnished in modern style. Electric lights artistically arranged, numerous electric fans, plate glass mirrors all arranged to make patrons cool and comfortable.

The kitchen is entirely separate being in a separate room and building.

Mr. Jones is a veteran restaurant man and deserves success.

NOTICE.

To my old friends and patrons I wish to thank you all for your past patronage and favors shown and in the future I will be found at 21 West Huerfano street with S. M. Dilts, who carries a line of Canton farm implements, also has the McCormick and Champion mowers and binders.

WHY GO OR SEND AWAY FOR FURNITURE?

It is not a thrifty thing to do and generally means dissatisfaction, unforeseen expense, broken goods and excessive cost. With our large stock it is not difficult to please, and if we have not the articles wanted we are in touch with the leading factories and familiar with the best styles in everything and can supply anything wanted at minimum cost. Goods sold by us are warranted, and with our skilled staff of workmen and facilities for bringing goods in our own cars and delivering with our own teams, can assure entire satisfaction. We want to secure the business and gladly work for it.

MANY LOTS SOLD IN LAKE PARK ADDITION—STATE REALTY COMPANY REPORTS CONSIDERABLE ACTIVITY IN VACANT LOTS

The last two weeks has probably witnessed greater activity in real estate in the southeast part of town than for any like period for some time. The widening of the undercrossing of Costilla by the Santa Fe, the city grading on Costilla street hill, and work ready to begin on the new car line to the cemetery, has had a tendency to improve values on property tributary.

THE STATE REALTY COMPANY, who recently purchased all the remaining lots in LAKE PARK addition, offered, as an additional inducement for the early purchase of a limited number of lots, to put in a 5-foot cement walk along the front of the first twenty-five lots sold. Although the present owners have been in possession of the property only about two weeks, fifteen of the first twenty-five lots have been taken, and the remainder will no doubt be gone by the end of the present week. The prices range from $250 to $[illegible], on easy terms. Anyone wishing to investigate can get further particulars at the company's office at 12 Pike's Peak ave., or at the branch office which will be established at the end of the Prospect Lake car line by Wednesday of this week.

IN OUR SOUTH WINDOW

IN OUR SOUTH WINDOW

You Can Look in the Glass

With a feeling of perfect confidence if your clothing bears the stamp of the May Clothing Co.

Men's Suits

This is our strong point. For this week we have on display a line of Men's suits that are not approached in Colorado at the prices we ask for them. We will not quote them here they are plainly marked on the suits in our South window.

With a brand new stock, and May prices, you have a winning combination. Look in the glass—our South window.

Men's Hats

We have succeeded in getting the best—the best in straws—the best in felts. Our famous "May" hat was a leader in the old store, and it is a worthy one still. We can please you in a straw hat—for we have them all—and May prices sell them on sight.

We are showing a strong line of children's regular 50c duck caps—"May" price 25c.

Men's Mountings

It's the Furnishings that tell in a man's appearance—fancy vests, new neckwear, and seasonable hosiery. In each of these lines our goods are top-notchers—and our prices just a little lower than the lowest. In summer underwear, for instance, we can supply the taste of the most careful dresser. In neckwear we have an assortment to be proud of.

TO RETIRE FROM PRESIDENCY OF MINING STOCK EXCHANGE

Splendid Success of Institution Largely Due to D. V. Donaldson's Unsparing Efforts as Head of Governing Board—Figures Show Enormous Business.

D. V. Donaldson will retire from the presidency of the Colorado Springs Mining Stock exchange on July 1. He has announced that his resignation will take effect on that date and a meeting of the governing board will be held within a few days to elect his successor.

Mr. Donaldson was one of the organizers of the exchange and was [illegible] from its inception to [illegible] 1899, when he was compelled [illegible] in order to look after other [illegible]. Much credit is given him for his efforts to make the exchange the leading institution of its kind in the [illegible] States and the strongest in the [illegible].

[illegible] that the exchange building was [illegible] in 1900. This is the building on East Pike's Peak avenue occupied by [illegible] store and the McRae cafe. [illegible] thousand dollars was paid for the property and since then twice [illegible] has been refused for it. [illegible] was made possible by the [illegible] of a clearing house and issuing [illegible] memberships to the eligible members at the rate of $500 each, thereby adding greatly to the treasury. The original memberships sold at $200 each.

After Mr. Donaldson was called to the exchange the second time, the governing committee, at his suggestion, [illegible] closed the department for loaning money on mining stocks which had been opened up during his absence. He recommended in lieu thereof the organization of the Exchange Registry and Guarantee company in order to [illegible] loans of money by the exchange and restrict them to first class mortgages. This permitted the loan of $30,000 which had been lying in the treasury idle. The interest therefrom added to the earnings from the registry department has made the exchange during the past few years practically self-sustaining.

Mr. Donaldson attributes much of the success of the exchange to the fact that the governing committee has always been in the control of [illegible] and business men of the city, who are associate members and practically control the board.

The importance of the Colorado Springs exchange to Colorado Springs and the necessity for able officers and managers will be fully understood by examining the following figures:

Shares and cash value of stock traded in on the Colorado Springs Mining Stock exchange:

	Shares	Cash Value
1902	[illegible]	$3,386,777
1903	[illegible]	1,229,880
1904	[illegible]	2,298,336

First five months of 1905—shares, 27,042,-[illegible]; cash value, $3,601,635.

The active management of the exchange has been in the hands of W. P. Kinney, the present secretary, during almost the whole life of the exchange, and he has been responsible for the handling of the above large amounts of cash, as well as for the actual management of the clearing house, the Registry and Guarantee company, and the floor management of the exchange.

SERIOUSLY HURT BY FALL FROM SCAFFOLD

George Forbes, a painter residing at 221 East Las Vegas street, met with a serious accident yesterday morning. While at work a strong gust of wind blew down the scaffold upon which he was working throwing him to the ground. His left arm was broken in two places between the wrist and elbow. He sustained three deep cuts in the sides and back of the head, and was otherwise badly bruised. The attending physicians, Dr. Leach and Dr. Huestis, report his injuries serious.

GAY THRONG AT CASINO OPENING

CITY'S NOTED RESORT WAS MECCA LAST NIGHT FOR PLEASURE SEEKERS.—A BRILLIANT SCENE.

The Broadmoor hotel and casino were formally opened for the season last night. Hundreds of people who had been eagerly awaiting the event attended the opening and the ball room, the cafe and the spacious porches of the casino were crowded to their full capacity with a gay and brilliant throng. Many took advantage of the perfect night by strolling about the grounds or by taking a row on the lake.

The opening was in many respects the most successful in the history of the popular resort. Barnes' orchestra, which has been engaged for the season, played exquisitely, and concert and dance music alike received liberal applause. Many of the more prominent society folk of Colorado Springs took occasion to give private dinner parties.

A. W. Bailey, manager of the hotel and casino for the last four years, has spared no pains to make the season of 1905 memorable for local pleasure seekers. Both the hotel and casino have been refurnished and every effort has been made to make the shrubbery, trees and lawns even more attractive than in former years. The boats, which gave so much pleasure to visitors last year, have been overhauled and put in readiness for the season.

Concerts, followed by dancing, will be given each evening for the remainder of the season, and on Sunday afternoon and evening there will be the usual sacred concerts.

The following program for this afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock follows:

SPRINGS YOUNG WOMEN HOME TO SPEND SUMMER.

Miss Maude S. McGarry, daughter of H. McGarry, of 1215 North Nevada avenue, returned last evening from Syracuse university, New York, where she has been pursuing a course in the college of fine arts. Miss McGarry will spend the summer here returning to the university in September. She has been honored by the Syracuse chapter of the Phi Mu Epsilon fraternity, which elected her its only official representative to attend the national convention of the fraternity which will be held in September at De Pauw university, Indiana. Miss Elaina Shepard and Miss Faith Haines, who have been attending Vassar, also returned home last evening.

CITY TO PUSH CASE AGAINST C. & S. IN THE SUPREME COURT

City Attorney Wm. C. Robinson filed in the supreme court of the state of Colorado yesterday the reply brief for the appellant in the case of the City of Colorado Springs, appellant, vs. the Colorado and Southern Railway company, appellee. The case has been hanging fire in the supreme court for several years and is to determine the right of the company to the use of Sahwatch street for terminal and yard purposes.

The brief is an interesting document especially in view of the fight which the company has recently been making to lay additional tracks in the street and which attempts have been frustrated by the police department upon several occasions. In the district court the company was awarded judgment and the case carried to the supreme court by the city.

The brief of the city attorney recites the ordinance granting the Denver and New Orleans Railroad company the right to lay its main track along the center line of Sahwatch street to the north line of Huerfano street and otherwise to extend its branch line, spurs or sidings, upon and over any property the company may own or hereafter acquire to depot grounds, warehouses, sidings or for other business purposes, or to connect track and sidings upon said property by switches and turnouts from the line of the track through the streets on the route hereinabove [illegible] [illegible] with the right to locate and use all depots, warehouses, machine shops, yards and other buildings, structures and appliances necessary and proper for the operation of said railroad, and the transfer of freight and passengers thereon and thereover to and from the city of Colorado Springs.

Counsel for the city argues:

We contend that this ordinance gave to the grantee only the right to locate its main track, single or double, in the center of Sahwatch street from Moreno to Huerfano street, and only such sidetracks, switches and turnouts as were necessary to connect said main track with property owned by the grantee; that the only sidetracks and switches which it could build were those necessary to connect its own business property with its main line of track.

Now, what has been done under the rights thus granted? It will be seen from the maps and from the testimony of the witnesses that from 2 to 4 sidetracks, from 4 to 6 tracks of all kinds, have been laid and maintained through the entire length of this street, together with various turnouts and crossovers, and no pretense is made that any of these tracks reaches [illegible] property owned or occupied by the [illegible].

Here we have a railroad company [illegible] a large [illegible] of business [illegible] and [illegible] owning [illegible] any ground or [illegible] whatever [illegible] business and claiming the right to the exclusive use of the [illegible] street for the reason that [illegible] is made that the defendant [illegible] use of this street [illegible] over it in order to reach a depot or any other property owned or occupied by it, but simply that it wants the room in the street to load cars and to transact its usual railroad business.

That this defendant [illegible] never had any rights [illegible] streets by virtue of this ordinance.

This point is based on the proposition that as this ordinance granted the rights herein described to the Denver and New Orleans Railroad company without the use of the words successors and assigns, or any similar words, the same could not be assigned without the consent of the [illegible]. [illegible] upon the further proposition that this ordinance [illegible] a condition precedent requiring the grantee to file a bond in the nature of an indemnity bond, which has never been filed.

If the defendant ever had any rights in the city's streets by virtue of this ordinance, [illegible] forfeited and lost them by a failure to comply with the terms of the ordinance.

The sixth section of this ordinance reads as follows:

Sec. 6. That all rights granted [illegible] the Denver and New Orleans Railroad company under [illegible] by said ordinance, and by this amendment thereto, are upon the express conditions that the said railroad company shall locate, construct and maintain its passenger and freight depots upon private property to be by it [illegible] south of Huerfano street [illegible] shall not have the right to construct its tracks north of said line at Huerfano street in this city and shall not have the right, authority or power to operate any railroad north of the south line of Huerfano street by steam power or otherwise unless thereunto hereafter expressly authorized by the city council of this city.

It will be seen that any and all rights granted by this ordinance were upon the express condition that the grantee should erect and maintain its freight and passenger depots upon ground of its own south of Huerfano street. At no time [illegible] will be seen that the defendants [illegible] maintaining either kind of depot. It appears that the city required some return for the use of its street and in very emphatic language required the grantee to bond and maintain depots. [illegible] this requirement is [illegible] ignored just as the requirement of a bond is ignored.

PLANS ARE COMPLETED FOR STATE Y. M. C. A. BOYS' CAMP

Camp Colorado for Y. M. C. A. boys of the state near Clyde on the Short Line [illegible] July 6.

Arrangements for the first Y. M. C. A. [illegible] are about completed [illegible] boys from [illegible] associations will attend. Colorado Springs will have the largest representation of about 40 boys. Pueblo will have 20, Cripple Creek will send 17, and Canon City will send 10.

The camp site selected is a beautiful garden spot surrounded by the best of natural scenery three-quarters of a mile northwest of Clyde. Excellent fishing streams surround the site. Fourteen large tents, each of which will be occupied by seven boys and a leader, will be pitched and the camp will be named "Camp Colorado."

S. S. Packard, of the Pueblo association, will be camp leader and will have charge of the camp affairs. W. [illegible] Thompson, Canon City, will superintend the religious work of the camp. J. S. [illegible], Pueblo, will supervise the athletics, which will be strongly featured. J. C. Arnold, Colorado Springs, will act as steward and be [illegible] plenty of "beans and spuds."

On Friday night, June 30, the boys [illegible] shoes and [illegible] for Pike's Peak. They expect to arrive at the Peak in time to [illegible] an excursion to Clyde of several hundred parents and friends of the boys [illegible] celebrate the nation's birthday at Camp Colorado. Fireworks will be exploded in the evening. The Rev. Mr. [illegible] of Pueblo will deliver a patriotic address.

A [illegible] will be organized [illegible] played. Every evening the boys will gather round the campfire and sing songs.

All members of the Boys' department and their parents have been invited to attend a reception to be given by members of last year's camp on the lawn in front of the association building Monday evening. The reception will be given to arouse interest in this year's camp. A taste of camp life will be given the boys Tuesday night when they will go to Bear Creek canon and spend the night on the hard, hard ground.

You may expect bargains at 23 N. Tejon. The May Clothing company doesn't do things half way.

MERRY HOUSE PARTY OF SPRINGS PEOPLE

The home of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. McDonald, in Victor, was transformed into a veritable flower garden on Thursday of last week in honor of a merry house party of friends from Colorado Springs. The party was composed of Miss Giddings, whose engagement to Dr. Griffith, of Springfield, Ill., was announced last month; Mrs. Ralph O. Giddings, Mrs. E. W. Giddings, Miss Burns and Miss Kate Burns.

A beautifully appointed luncheon was served on Thursday, when covers were laid for seven.

On Thursday evening an informal [illegible] in Victor. The rooms were artistically decorated in bridesmaids roses and ferns forming beautiful designs [illegible] and green [illegible] received with Mr. and Mrs. C. T. McDonald, and Mrs. H. T. Corbin presided at the table in the dining room assisted by Miss Lois Shilling. Refreshments were served around the daintily arranged table. During the last hour the charm of the evening rose to its height in the delightful music furnished by Miss Lois Shilling and the hostess. Miss Lois sings with a delicacy and tenderness that wins favor with every one. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Shilling, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Shilling, Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Corbin, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Shilling, Mr. W. A. Rolleston, Mr. Charles D. Gurney, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Atchison, Mr. Luther Lennox, Miss Lois Shilling, Mrs. E. W. Giddings, Mrs. Ralph O. WILL FORM HAWKEYE CLUB TUESDAY NIGHT

The Hawkeye society will be organized Tuesday night. In just what hall the big meeting will be held has not been definitely decided, but this will be announced in Monday morning's Gazette. A. B. Waterman, temporary secretary of the proposed Iowa society, and chief promoter of the movement, has received hundreds of names of those who expect to become members, and there is no doubt that the idea is a big hit. The first picnic will be held this summer. Membership doesn't cost anything.

FULL ASSOCIATED PRESS REPORT.

PATTERSON AS A REPUBLICAN ALLY.

TOMORROW night the Hon. Thomas M. Patterson, the distinguished lawyer-editor-statesman who is reluctantly acknowledged by the people of Colorado as one of their representatives in the upper house of Congress, will begin the construction of his fences for the Senatorial campaign of 1907. He has arranged a banquet in honor of himself to which the members of the Democratic State Committee and the faithful throughout the state have been bidden. The guests are not expected to pay for the eatables and drinkables, and in return for this courtesy of Senator Patterson's, they are not expected to charge him anything for listening to his speech.

The public does not need to be reminded that for the last two years Patterson's leadership of the Colorado Democracy has been about like the leadership of a dog tied to the rear axle of a wagon. But the next legislature will elect his successor in the Senate, and though that legislature will not be chosen until the fall of 1906 Patterson thinks there is no time like the present to begin laying plans. He wants to see that a Democratic legislature is elected, and above all that it is composed of Patterson Democrats, for Alva Adams, the perpetual candidate, is out after Patterson's job, and in his present role of martyr Alva is a formidable rival.

All of which explains the call for a meeting of the Democratic State Committee in Denver tomorrow, and the reckless disregard for expense with which Senator Patterson is getting up the banquet given in connection therewith in honor of himself. He is to sound the keynote, and readers of the Patterson papers will have no difficulty in guessing what the keynote will be. "Down with the Money Devil; up with municipal ownership of everything"—this is to be the slogan.

If Patterson succeeds in his scheme of capturing the Democratic state organization on this issue—or on any other issue for that matter—the Republican party of Colorado will show itself decidedly ungrateful if it does not also tender him a banquet. He certainly will have earned a reward from it, for nothing he could do would afford a better guarantee of its success in the next campaign. Patterson is first, last and always an extremist. His platform is always whatever happens to be the latest fad in politics. Just now that fad is municipal ownership; hence, Patterson wants every town in Colorado to run everything within its borders, from street railways and electric lighting plants down to corner groceries and blacksmith shops.

On this platform he will rally to his support all of the long haired, wild-eyed cranks in Colorado. It will be a picturesque crowd. There will be his old-time chums, Moyer and Haywood, Owers of Leadville, and Belford and Rush of Denver—all disinterested patriots who are "agin the Government" because the Government compels them to obey the law and punishes them for dynamiting mines and stealing elections. On the other side will be the conservative, thinking element. With such a division there would be no doubt of the result. Really, the Republican party ought to begin preparations for a banquet to Senator Patterson at once.

GRANITE FOR STREET PAVING.

THE suggestion by Mr. Irving Howbert that disintegrated granite be used for street paving in Colorado Springs is a good one, at least insofar as it will arouse discussion and serve to bring this very important question before the people. The streets in the business section must be paved some time, the present need is urgent, and it is well to begin thinking of the matter now.

Disintegrated granite has one decided advantage in its low cost. The supply close at hand is inexhaustible, and the city would have only to pay the cost of excavation and of hauling it perhaps ten miles. It forms a smooth, hard surface and is very durable. The chief objection to it has been that it is almost as dusty as our present gravel streets. This is the condition of the short stretch on South Tejon Street which was paved with granite a few years ago.

But if, as Mr. Howbert suggests, the streets were excavated to a depth of about six inches and filled in with clean granite, which could then be packed down firmly with a steam roller, the result might be different. The dusty condition of the paved portion of South Tejon street is due mostly to the fact that only one side of the street is paved, the other side being of worn-out gravel. With all of the streets in the business section paved their entire width with clean granite very little dirt would accumulate on them, and the dust nuisance would be reduced to the minimum.

But the question of material is of secondary consideration, for the first thing now is a decision to pave the streets. Once this question is settled there will be time to examine the merits of different materials and figure on the comparative cost. Colorado Springs needs paved streets and needs them badly, and the people should begin to think seriously of the matter.

BATTLESHIPS VS. TORPEDO BOATS.

THE old controversy over the relative merits of the battleship and the torpedo boat has been started afresh by the showing made by both classes of vessels in the Battle of the Sea of Japan. Like most controversies of the kind, nobody seems to be converted. The adherents of the battleship find conclusive evidence of the superiority of their craft in the terrific damage done by the Japanese big guns, which literally riddled many of the heaviest and best protected Russian ships. The friends of the torpedo boat point to the equally disastrous execution wrought by the "hornets" in the latter stages of the battle, when a swarm of them were turned loose to destroy the already demoralized ships of the enemy.

No doubt this war has taught many valuable naval lessons, but it would be idle to say that either style of craft in question has been relegated to the rear or exalted to a place where it could constitute a navy in itself. It has been shown that under certain conditions the torpedo boat is a tremendously effective weapon, capable of sending to the bottom the largest and costliest battleship. But the torpedo boat is of necessity merely a supplementary vessel. It can not navigate the high seas, it can not be used in day time or in rough weather, it is useless against land defences, and it can not, in any numbers, constitute a fleet capable of fighting a battle against ships armed with quick-firing guns.

Perhaps the most important lesson taught by the recent battle is the importance of accurate gunfire. Togo's victories have been won at a distance of from one to four miles, and at this distance his gunners have been able to strike the enemy with telling effect. In the fight in the Sea of Japan the Japanese gunners concentrated their fire first on one Russian vessel and then on another, so the Russians were smothered before they had time to realize what was happening. Big guns and accurate marksmanship tell the story. The real work was done by the Japanese 12-inch guns, and it was shown that gunfire alone can sink the biggest battleship.

It is plain then that battleships must form the basis of an effective fighting fleet, because the heavy guns that do the execution can not be mounted in small and unstable vessels. The fact that several Russian battleships were sunk either by gunfire or torpedoes is not a fair argument against this kind of craft. If the Russian ships had been officered and manned by as competent forces as their enemies were the result would have been different. Each would have inflicted severe damage on the other, but neither would have suffered as badly as did the ships under Rojestvensky's command.

Naval experts have never claimed that the battleship is invulnerable. It can be sunk, just as any other ship can, either by a properly placed torpedo or by accurate and heavy gunfire. But it is able to take more punishment than any other kind of craft yet devised because it is more heavily armored. Again it can inflict more punishment, because it carries the largest and most powerful guns, and with these guns it can stand off and fight at such a distance as to be out of range of the guns of any other vessel except its own kind. And in a fight between battleships victory is bound to be on the side that has the best gunners.

THE STATE REALTY ASSOCIATION.

THE organization which is today doing the most to make Colorado known throughout the country, and to attract homeseekers, investors and tourists to this state, is the Colorado State Realty Association. Two or three years ago it was merely a body of real estate men with about 200 members, but since then it has expanded into a sort of state chamber of commerce with a membership of 700, including merchants, bankers, editors and large property-owners, as well as real estate men.

The work done by this association is invaluable. It maintains a press bureau which supplies Eastern newspapers with "boosting" information about Colorado, and this matter is gladly used by a score or more of the larger dailies because it is of general interest to their readers. The association also keeps four lecturers on the road, giving free illustrated descriptive lectures on Colorado in the larger cities throughout the country. Large quantities of advertising literature are distributed, and a Colorado bureau is maintained at the Portland Exposition.

The object of the Realty Association is not merely to sell real estate. It is to stimulate tourist travel, encourage Eastern capitalists to invest in Colorado industries, attract homeseekers, secure needed legislation affecting the state's interests, encourage legitimate irrigation projects, and in every other way to aid in the development of Colorado and add to its prosperity. The Realty Association has long since outgrown its name, for it is now a promotion and publicity organization.

This is the character of the organization which will hold its annual convention in Colorado Springs this week, from Tuesday to Friday inclusive. The convention will bring here several hundred of the most alert and progressive business men in Colorado, and they will come from every part of the state, for the work of the association is by no means confined to any one locality. The program includes addresses by such well known men as William E. Curtis, the correspondent; Gifford Pinchot, head of the Federal Bureau of Forestry; President Granville Pendleton of the New Mexico Immigration Bureau, Congressman Brooks, Governor McDonald, Alva Adams, State Auditor Bent, Register Mark E. Woodruff of the State Land Board, and Professor W. H. Olin of the State Agricultural College.

The meeting of the Realty Association will be an event of considerable importance, not only to its members but to Colorado Springs. It will make our people better acquainted with the work being done for the advancement of Colorado, and in this way will stimulate an interest that is sure to be beneficial.

It isn't very becoming for the Czar to rebuke the officers of the Baltic fleet who ran away from battle. There is an old story about how Nicholas, while still heir to the throne, ran away from a crank who attacked him with a stick while he was traveling in Japan. His companion, the Crown Prince of Greece, disarmed the assailant, and in writing to his parents of the incident, used the phrase, "then Nicky ran." It is said that Nicholas' father, the Czar Alexander III, was so enraged at this public exhibition of his son's cowardice that he treated him with contempt ever afterward.

The fourteen-year-old son of the late William Ziegler is said to have an income of $28.93 a minute. Most American boys of that age would be content with the ninety-three cents if it came once a week, but it's different with a boy who has before him the job of finding the North Pole.

The King of Italy didn't say very much when he declared that the President of the United States has more power than any European ruler except the Czar. Just now the Czar has about as much real power as the henpecked husband who lives in constant terror of his better half.

Four American cruisers are now on their way to France to bring back the body of Paul Jones. If they should meet a British warship on the return trip the bones of the old commander would need close watching. They might rise from the coffin.

The Czar telegraphed congratulations to Rojestvensky, who received several wounds, but none to Enquist, whose skin is still intact. Queer country, where a man is a subject for congratulation only when he is shot to pieces.

The Mississippi town which declined a Carnegie library had probably heard of Mr. Carnegie's gift to Booker Washington's school. Another case of tainted money.

An Illinois college has made Mr. Bryan a doctor of laws, probably in recognition of his unselfish efforts to doctor up the laws which don't need doctoring.

The naval maneuvers are ended and Washington was not even "constructively" captured. What a comfort it is to know that the country is still safe!

Sunday Reading

By Rev. Wm. Barnes Lower, D. D.

The last chapter of the last book of the Bible closes with a description of the Holy City, the new Jerusalem. It is a city that shall come down from heaven holy and good. Where it shall be located God will decide. Through the city will flow a river, every drop of which shall contain everlasting life-giving power. The fountains of perpetual youth is in this new Jerusalem. The ancients placed it on earth, the prophets placed it in heaven. The new Jerusalem river will be a river of purity, of grace, of power, of beauty, rapid in its flow, exhaustless in its quantity, dispensing life and verdure on every side.

A City of Homes.

There will be no syndicates in heaven. Each resident will own his own home. He is erecting the [illegible] here. The material for our heavenly home is being prepared here. What our home will be in heaven depends upon the material we send up from here. We may depend upon it that the master builder will do his best with the materials we send up. A hut in heaven will be better than a palace upon earth. But why have a lodge when we might have a palace? Great cities are generally built on the banks of large rivers to ensure health and pleasure, and the carrying on of traffic. [illegible] here where God's [illegible] His will is done, [illegible] home in heaven? Our earthly home is but the home of the soul. In our earthly cities, however, we [illegible] streets very much polluted, [illegible]. In that heavenly city [illegible] things will be unknown. The wicked will not be permitted to enter. God's throne, which is now in the heavens, will then be in the midst of the New Jerusalem. As we know our earthly home by the street, the number and the surroundings, so we will know our heavenly home by the material we have been sending up. Faith will bring us to that home, but the size of it will depend upon our good deeds done here. Merit does not save, but it is a factor to be considered in the enjoyment of its heavenly [illegible].

The Tree of Life.

The river of the water of life runs through the streets of the Holy City. Both banks are lined with trees, each tree being a tree of life. These trees are marvelously fertile, bearing each twelve manner of fruits, and bearing it in perfection and abundance. Every month is the fruit born, furnishing food for the redeemed. The tree of life flourished in the garden of an earthly Eden, it will also flourish in the paradise of God. This tree of life cut down by the sword of Divine Justice flourishes now and is exalted above all the trees of the wood. Though exalted in heaven His branches bend down to the earth and his children may pick the fruit.

A World Without A Night.

There is no darkness where all is made good. To take night away from us in our present state would be to rob us of a precious boon. Night brings rest and refreshment. But a calm reflection shows us that night in this world is a release from trouble and worry. These will not be known in heaven, hence no need of night. Our imperfect condition here demands night; our perfect condition in heaven will not need it. God, who is light, will so impress himself upon us that we will need no candle, neither light of the sun. The uninterrupted light proceeding from the personality of God will be a continuous source of pleasure and delight. The beauty of holiness will be the beauty of every soul. There will be no loneliness in heaven because there will be no night.

Marked at Death.

Death fixes our characters. If our names will be found on the Lamb's Book of Life His name will be found written in our foreheads. The righteous go on into everlasting life, the wicked into everlasting punishment. When we reach the judgment seat of Christ we will find our actions stored up against us bearing the stamp we have put upon them. Prepare, O traveler, for that time when your character will be established for all eternity. If one is unjust, he will be unjust still. No amount of [illegible] will bring [illegible]. As the tree falleth so shall it be. When Christ comes he brings with him every man's reward. Being omniscient he knows clearly what the [illegible] work of each one has been. Jesus Christ is the alpha and omega of the work of salvation. Struggling soul, let Jesus be alpha and omega to your life.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

There are no white lies [illegible]. A lie is a lie in God's sight and man ought to [illegible]. A sin is a sin in God's sight and man should not [illegible] it. Lying is a perversion of the language which God gave to man for a better use. Lying makes men more like the devil than God. There are many ways a man can lie other than with his lips. A man can act a lie, he may look a lie, his manner may be false. There are no minor moralities, but there are some which are considered not so important as others. In the making of character the minor moralities are the most important. They are the moralities that are most before the public gaze. They are the moralities by which we are judged. Any deception is a lie. Misrepresentation and prevarication are denounced in God's word in the plainest [illegible]. To many falsehood is only a fault when it is coupled with hurt and injury to others. As good words always help, so false words always hinder. No one was ever [illegible] but that it hurt somebody. [illegible]

The Folly of Anger.

The apostle's advice against anger is the best that can be given. If a man could behold his unnatural face in a glass when in a state of anger it would [illegible] his cure. Anger is a poor [illegible]. It destroys the feelings of the heart and [illegible] the life. There is [illegible] like [illegible]. [illegible] is like a ship at sea which has a pirate crew to man her. Do not attempt to put out the fire of another man's anger but the fire of your own anger. The blaze will only be greater. One mad dog will make as many mad dogs as he bites. To be angry and sin not, is to be angry in that sphere where goodness always operates. God is angry with the wicked every day, but this does not effect his absolute goodness. It is a resolute indignation which does not effect the state of the heart, nor incur the animosity of the mind. As God's indignation endures but for a moment, man's anger should well subside before sunset.

An Honest Living.

Some men do not get an honest [illegible], hence the indignation against stealing. The man who gets a living without work is stealing. [illegible] Not having enough to do [illegible] people today. The young men [illegible] highest moral results.

Immodest Language.

A great [illegible] Nothing will [illegible] your tongue and you have achieved the secret of success.

RANDOM REFLECTIONS.

Following an Illusion.

A shadowy effigy of the Virgin Mary was reported to have mysteriously appeared for several nights recently on the wall of a house in Philadelphia. Hundreds of people hurried to see the marvel. On the second night people came from all over the city. On the third night the lame, halt and blind were brought to be cured and many knelt in the street and worshipped the figure. The great crowd blocked the cars in the street and the greatest excitement prevailed in the neighborhood. The police had to be called out to quell the miniature riots which took place between the pious and the scoffers and to clear the way for the trolley cars. It was found that the rays of an electric light were reflected from a bay window on one side of the street and thrown on the side wall of the house on the opposite side. A lace curtain in the bay window gave the reflected shadow the appearance of a draped woman's figure kneeling in an attitude of prayer. The suggestion that the figure was the image of the Virgin spread like wild fire. Truly as Shakespeare says

"Some there be that shadows kiss,
Some have but a shadow's bliss."

Let us not blame the poor dumb horse for starting at a shadow, when we see mortals of a higher mould so caught up by an illusion.

THE PRIZE WOLF STORY.

"The prize wolf story of the season comes from Ewen, Mich.," said A. D. Roth, of Grand Rapids, Mich., at the St. Louis. "According to the tale, one James Colgin, of that place, made $364 in a two days' wolf hunt.

"About 10 miles north of Ewen is a place where the deer are supposed to be quite numerous. It was a sort of a yard, so to speak, where the deer were wont to congregate in large numbers. Colgin believed he would find wolves there. Partly to investigate, but prepared for action, he went to the scene. Wolves were there and they were chasing [illegible] the deer [illegible]. Colgin had a quantity of [illegible] which he cut up and distributed around the place. In each piece he placed some strychnine.

"The following day he returned to the place and found that five wolves had eaten the bait and died. This made him feel pretty good. But when he heard a pack howling near by and coming in his direction he made up his mind that he might easily add to this number if he went about it in the right way. It so happened that he was but a short distance from a lake. He figured that the deer would run out on the ice, with the wolves in close pursuit. This is just what happened, according to Colgin's version of the affair. The pack passed him, not more than 50 yards away, and he opened fire. With a dozen well-directed shots from his repeater he dropped [illegible] of the savage brutes, thus saving the deer's life. Whether the deer then fell upon its knees and asked that blessings be bestowed upon the [illegible] shooter is not recorded, but the supposition is that this is just what happened.

"For each wolf Colgin received a bounty of $22, and he sold the [illegible] for $6 each, making $28 for each of the thirteen animals, or a total of $364 for his two days' work, which is [illegible] going some."—Duluth Herald.

A Viennese naturalist declares that nearly all reptiles that die from natural causes close their lives between [illegible] and midnight, only a few between midnight and morning, and fewer still in daylight. The Perils of Norway

Being the Sixth in the Series of Revelations of a Diplomatic Spy

By Allen Upward

Copyright, 1905, by the Pearson Pub. Co.

THE readers of my previous revelations will have noticed that I have constantly been engaged in thwarting the schemes of the cunning rulers of Russia. This has been to me a labor of love. My father, as I have said, was a native of Poland, and I have avenged his wrongs on the government which drove him forth to exile.

I have already related how I exposed and defeated the insidious design concealed under the peace rescript of Nicholas II. Hardly had this audacious intrigue miscarried when Europe was startled to hear that the ministers of the imperial peacemaker had overthrown the ancient liberties of Finland, in order to swell the Finnish contingent to the armies of the tsar.

This time I admit that I was deceived, like everybody else. The brutal frankness of the proceeding disarmed suspicion. When Russia openly declares herself a tyrant, it is difficult to believe she is dissembling.

But there was one man in Europe who saw that there was more in the proceedings against Finland than met the eye. This was a monarch whose genius and nobility of character would have placed him at the head of living rulers had he been born to the command of a great power instead of a small and distracted state. I need scarcely say that I refer to his majesty, King Oscar of Sweden and Norway.

It was with peculiar satisfaction that I received a confidential summons from this king, whose fine qualities I had long admired, and by whom I felt it a distinction to be trusted. I was far from guessing the real nature of the business on which I was to be employed.

As the message did not come to me through the Scandinavian minister in Paris, but was a private autograph communication from King Oscar himself, I was disposed to think his majesty wanted me to adjust some family affair. It is well known that the Bernadottes are not more free from such anxieties than other royal houses.

On my arrival at the beautiful capital of Sweden, I put up at the Hotel Rydberg, entering myself as the Baron de Nouville, on tour. The same evening I was called upon by one of the king's intimate friends, the Count Soderhelm, who took me across to the palace, and introduced me into King Oscar's private cabinet.

I noticed as we crossed the Place Gustavus Adolphus that the flag was not hoisted on the palace. His majesty was supposed to be at Drottningholm, from which place he had come secretly in a small launch for the purpose of our interview.

As soon as Count Soderhelm had presented me to his majesty, he retired to the antechamber, leaving us together.

"Perhaps you are wondering what I have sent for you to do?" King Oscar began.

"At least I do not doubt that any service on which your majesty employs me will be an honorable one," I answered respectfully.

The king smiled.

"I have not sent for you to pay me compliments," he said smilingly. "Let me first ask if it is true that you are [illegible] to the Russian government?"

I looked at the king in some surprise.

"It is better for me to tell you, sire, that I do not allow my private feelings to enter into my work. The Russian government has employed me before now, and may do so again. In which case I should serve it as loyally as I hope to do to your majesty."

The king did not seem displeased by this frankness.

"I respect you for that answer," he said graciously. "I ought not to have asked you for your personal confidence."

"I am a Pole by my father's side, sire," I threw in.

King Oscar thanked me for this hint [illegible].

"Let us come to business. You have [illegible] I expect of the deterioration [illegible] Russia in Finland."

I bowed, [illegible] my curiosity at this unexpected opening.

"You know that Finland is an ancient province of the Swedish crown, and that when it was united to Russia after the fall of Napoleon my ancestor, the then Crown Prince Bernadotte, was authorized to take Norway as a compensation?"

"I do, sire."

"Perhaps you know also that the exchange has been a disastrous one for Sweden. The Finns were contented and happy under our rule, while the Norwegians have done nothing but quarrel with the Swedes for a century."

"I have heard something of this," I responded.

"Now, as long as Finland held the position of a semi-independent state, over which the tsar ruled as grand duke of Finland, it was possible for us to regard her as a buffer between us and Russia. We had every reason to hope that if the Russians wished to attack us they would have to subdue Finland first."

"I was hardly aware of that, sire."

"It is the fact. The Finnish civilization is really Swedish, our language is spoken there, and the Swedish element in the population looks on Sweden as its real home. Very good. That being so, the Russians have decided to conquer Finland in time of peace, under the cloak of administrative measures."

"Your majesty means that this attack on Finland is really an attack on Sweden and Norway?"

"It is the first step towards an attack on Sweden," King Oscar answered with significance. "The question of Norway is the matter about which I have sent for you."

I gazed at the king in astonishment.

"I am the king of Norway as well as of Sweden," his majesty pursued, "but you must not think I favor one country more than the other. But I might as well be king at the same time of France and Germany, for any real harmony there is between the two countries. The Norwegians are working for absolute separation; the Swedes will grant them everything except the right to make war on Sweden, and yet they cannot agree."

"You fear, sire, that the Norwegians will fight in order to secure their independence."

"I fear it is rather the other way about," the king answered sorrowfully. "They aim at independence in order to be able to fight. You see me in the position of a father whose two children are ready to rush at one another's throats, and who cannot show kindness to one without incurring the hatred of the other. This situation has poisoned the peace of mind of every sovereign of Scandinavia for a hundred years. It broke my grandfather's heart."

I listened to this sad confession with respectful sympathy. King Oscar proceeded.

"Let me tell you some more. Before the last Russo-Turkish war, the geography of the Balkans had been made for a year the special study of the military school in Petersburg. Last month the geography of Scandinavia was given a similar precedence. That is not all. A score of Russian officers disguised as woodcutters have been coming over the northern frontier and making their way down through Sweden, surveying the country as they go."

"Surely they can be arrested as spies?"

"We dare not," was the response. "It would be forcing Russia's hand. We can only watch and await developments."

"The Germans ought to know of this," I ventured to remark.

"The Germans are more afraid of Russia than we are," the king answered. "Germany is no longer a first-class power. There are in fact only four powers of the first magnitude today: Great Britain, Russia, the United States and China. The two English powers together could dictate to the world, but they are divided by their childish Anglo-American jealousy. China is still asleep. Consequently all the other powers of Europe are little more than vassals of the tsar. France has placed herself under his protection; Austria has become Russia's junior partner in the Balkans. The independence of Germany is only nominal; the emperor takes his time from Petersburg. No other country counts."

It was the first time that I had heard the situation summed up with such pitiless plainness.

"You consider, then, that Russia is actually about to draw the sword?" I asked.

"No, she will leave us to do that. Russia has discovered that her conquests advance better under the cloak of peace. She means to take Norway under cover of a declaration in favor of Norwegian independence."

"But the Norwegians—are they mad enough to become parties to that? Do they want to exchange King Log for King Stork?"

"Go and see," was King Oscar's reply.

I quitted his majesty's presence and returned to my hotel deeply disturbed by what I had heard. I could not suppose that the most sagacious sovereign in Europe was indulging in idle fears. Yet it was hard to believe that the inhabitants of a free, self-governing country would voluntarily exchange their condition for servitude to the Asiatic despotism which had just laid Finland prostrate at their door.

Three days afterwards I arrived in Christiania. I had made careful preparations for the task before me. I assumed the character of a Russian spy, as the least likely to provoke suspicion of the quarter from which I really came. And I had disguised my person as effectively as I knew how, lest I should meet a real agent of the tsar's government, who might detect A—— V—— beneath the outward semblance of Alexander Volkuski.

The pains I had taken were well rewarded. In the hotel at which I put up I found staying a man who passed as a Finnish officer, of Swedish nationality, but whom I immediately recognized as Count Marloff, the confidential right-hand man of M. de Witte himself. It is true the Russian was disguised, and the disguise was a very good one; but by an almost incredible oversight he had ventured to assume that a disguise which had already done duty once might safely be used again.

It was seven years before, in Teheran, that I had seen that reddish wig and noted that peculiar limp, but if Count Marloff had offered me his card I could not have been more sure of his identity. Such mistakes may be pardonable to a mere detective, but they are fatal in our profession.

My tactics were soon decided on. I knew that the attention of "Colonel Sigersen" would be quickly attracted to a Russian staying in Christiania, and I have generally found the boldest game to be the most successful.

I seized the first opportunity of the count's being seated alone in the smoking-room of the hotel, to go up to him boldly.

"How do you do, count?" I said in Russian. "Or perhaps you will wish me to say 'Colonel'?"

Marloff started, as well he might, and stared hard into my face.

"My name is Colonel Sigersen," he said forbiddingly. "Have I had the pleasure of meeting you before?"

This was the opening I wanted. I drew back disdainfully.

"I must apologize," I said, with irony. "I have not had the honor of meeting you, Colonel Sigersen. Pray do not think I wish to intrude on you."

Marloff saw his mistake. In the secret service of Russia nothing is more common than for two different agents to be employed independently of each other, and even as spies upon each other. When that happens, if the two men are wise they strike up a private alliance and compare notes at their employers' expense. When they keep each other at arm's length, each has it in his power to cause annoyance to the other.

Marloff was now in the position of having refused my overture towards friendship without knowing who I was. This left me free to watch him, without rendering any explanations. He was consequently furious with himself.

The fact is the man was a mere [illegible], as one who drops into a profession from [illegible]. De Witte had taken him out of a cavalry regiment and made a diplomatist of him, but when it came to secret service work he was a child in the hands of a man like myself.

I saw the pretended colonel get up and limp out of the room, no doubt to send a cipher dispatch to the minister complaining of my attitude. I went to the manager of the hotel, introduced myself as a Russian police agent on the track of a great rouble forgery, and wormed out of him a mass of particulars with regard to Sigersen's movements.

I gathered that he had been in Christiania about a month, having traveled through Norway first as far north as Trondhjem. He had made numerous friends in the Norwegian capital, including several prominent members of the Storthing, as they call their parliament. But his chosen intimate appeared to be a judge named ——, who was regarded as a guiding spirit of the party most strongly hostile to the Swedish connection.

It was Judge —— who had instigated the erection of fortresses on the Swedish-Norwegian frontier, guarding the approach to Christiania. The same man, unfortunately, had decided on the judicial bench that no native of Sweden could exercise the rights of a citizen in Norway until he had taken out letters of naturalization. In short, this judge had carefully taught his countrymen to treat the Swedes as Englishmen were treated by the Boers in the days of the Transvaal republic.

All this [illegible] I had been [illegible] by being [illegible]. [illegible] of the understanding between Judge [illegible] [illegible].

I asked the hotel manager:

"How does Colonel Sigersen pay your bill?"

"By cheque [illegible] the ready answer [illegible] bank."

"Is it usual for foreign visitors to have a banking account open in Christiania?" I inquired, keeping up the part of a detective.

The manager admitted that it was not. Evidently, now I had drawn his attention to the point, it struck him as suspicious. I left him, feeling that I had secured an ally in my watch on Marloff, and made my way to the offices of the bank.

The director of this institution received me with every courtesy. Bankers are too often victimized for them to regard the police with any feeling but gratitude. The tale I brought was received with open ears.

"I have reason to think that an account has been opened with you for purposes of fraud. If I am right, the swindlers have endeavored to gain your confidence at the outset by a large credit. This credit has been opened in the name of Colonel Sigersen, a pretended Finlander."

The manager was visibly uneasy.

"A gentleman of that name has opened an account with us, certainly," he answered cautiously. "But he brought the very best introductions. In fact I could not have asked for better."

"Have you any objections to tell me the character of those introductions?"

"I don't mind telling you that one was from a well-known citizen, a man in a very responsible position."

"In short, Judge ——?"

The manager started.

"How did you know that?" he demanded.

"I have been on Colonel Sigersen's track for a long time," I answered evasively. "I venture to think that if you make inquiries you will find that his honor, Judge —— knows very little about him really, and nothing at all about his financial standing."

"I will communicate with his honor and let you know the result."

"Do so by all means. In the meantime, perhaps you may be willing to tell me how this man's credit is supplied."

The manager hesitated.

"I hardly know whether I ought to betray his affairs until I have something more to go upon."

"Perhaps you will let me ask you if Sigersen has ever made a large payment [illegible]?"

"[illegible]"

"[illegible] for the present," I said. "When he does, I advise you to pass them on to your Russian correspondent as quickly as possible."

This [illegible] the manager [illegible] came very nervous. By degrees I worked on his fears, till he [illegible] me to examine [illegible] and found [illegible] Marloff had brought a bona-fide credit upon a Petersburg bank, and [illegible] to my purpose had drawn several heavy checks in favor of Judge ——.

"So far you seem to be on the safe side," I commented, as I finished my inspection. "But I have two pieces of advice to give you. [illegible] books [illegible] double notes till you hear from me again."

The manager thanked me and allowed me to depart.

I had now to consider the best way in which to approach the judge, who was not likely to prove easily gullible. [illegible] that Marloff and he were in each other's [illegible] [illegible] arrest.

"On what charge?" I demanded, as soon as I had recovered from my first surprise.

"On a charge of conspiracy against the government of Norway," was the answer.

"I arrived in Norway only yesterday," I exclaimed.

"All that you can tell to the judge," retorted the police officer.

"Let me see your warrant," I said.

The man produced the paper, while the hotel manager, who had arrived on the scene, looked on astonished, as he well might.

The warrant bore the signature of Judge ——.

"Take me to the judge instantly, if you will be so good," I said.

"I am going to," the officer retorted.

[illegible] We walked together [illegible] house. He appeared [illegible] functions of a judge and [illegible] magistrate, and I was conducted [illegible] of [illegible].

Judge —— [illegible] a strong [illegible] and ambitious intriguer, with courage but not very much disinterested patriotism.

"What is the meaning of this preposterous arrest?" I demanded with warmth.

"This is an affair of state. I will examine the accused in private," the judge announced, not answering me directly.

As soon as the room was cleared he turned to me.

"Who are you?" was his first question.

"I am a Russian," I answered.

"I know that. What is your business here?"

I breathed again. I [illegible] Marloff had failed to guess [illegible].

[illegible]

"It is you who [illegible] your [illegible]."

"Your honor has been imposed upon. But it is of no consequence. Tell me what I am charged with and I [illegible]."

"You are a spy."

"[illegible] detective."

"By whom are you employed?"

"Your honor has my papers."

The judge bit his lip. He clearly [illegible] could see that it was not his game to bring me to a public trial.

"It seems to me, sir, that it is a mistake for us to quarrel," I said after giving him a minute for reflection. "I have annoyed Count Marloff by recognizing him. That is not an offence against the law of Norway, I presume. On the other hand, if I am right in my conjectures, or rather my instincts, the count himself should be the last man to provoke a public inquiry into his business here. Your honor knows the law better than I, but I should have thought there might be something in the business transacted between you and the count which would [illegible]."

He interrupted me.

"I want to know who you are here. If you are a friend of course there is no need to quarrel." He shrugged his shoulders.

"I come as a friend," I replied. "I am prepared to cooperate with you, to assist you in fact. But I must first know how you stand with regard to Marloff. Is he your personal friend, or are the relations between you exclusively political?"

"I have no personal feeling for him," was the guarded answer.

"Very good. In that case your honor shall see my real credentials. I must tell you frankly that Count Marloff has ceased to enjoy the implicit confidence of his and my government."

I put my hand into an inner pocket, and produced a slip of paper in the foreign handwriting of the Russian foreign minister.

"Does your honor recognize that writing?" I asked, with a confident air.

Judge —— was completely deceived. He glanced at the few lines, which were in French, with an air of the greatest respect. Then he looked at me.

"I must apologize, prince ——" he began, when I raised a warning finger.

"Hush! Not my real name, please."

I took back the paper with an air as if my life depended on its preservation, and restored it to my pocket.

"I am exceedingly sorry to have had to show you this," I said gravely. "I have, in fact, exceeded instructions, which were simply to watch Count Marloff and report on the progress he was making. His own violent action has forced me to go further than I wished. I am sorry to say it confirms the suspicion entertained in the foreign office that he is playing a double game. He is a protege of M. de Witte's, but M. de Witte is not infallible.

"Now, I am afraid I must ask your honor to take me into your confidence. I trust you have not put yourself into Marloff's power? I know that he has paid you considerable sums."

Judge —— looked decidedly nervous.

"I have given him nothing in writing, I believe," he answered, glancing at the same time at an iron safe let into the wall of the room.

"So far, so good. It is writing that counts in these affairs. Have you any objection to my seeing the memoranda you have made of your conversations with him?"

The judge stared at me as if I had been a wizard.

"I don't know what makes you think I have taken any memoranda," he protested.

"Just as you please, sir," I said drily. "I should have been gratified if you had so far confided in me as to let me glance inside that safe. But you are right to be cautious."

His eyes turned once more in the direction of the safe in spite of himself. I saw a struggle going on in his mind.

"There is no necessity for you to decide hastily," I said in my blandest tones. "I am as anxious as you are that you should have every possible security. If you are so far satisfied as to release me from arrest, we can sit down and talk over things quietly."

This hint had the desired effect. The judge called in the policeman and informed him that his services were no longer required.

As soon as I heard the outer door of the building close on the departing officer I drew nearer the judge, lowering my voice to a confidential whisper, as I said:

"Now you shall have the truth."

He bent forward to listen, and as he did so I launched my clenched fist at his right temple with my full force, and he dropped senseless without so much as a sigh.

The moment I was satisfied that he was unconscious, I stepped to the door and locked it. Then I rifled his pocket of his bunch of keys, picked out the right one and opened the safe, all without drawing breath.

The contents of the safe were chiefly law papers, which I did not waste time over. But in a secret drawer at the top I found something that interested me more.

It was nothing less than a draft treaty, or treaty to be made between the Norwegian [illegible], acting without the knowledge of their king, and the imperial government of Russia!

I did not stay to read the document through. After a hasty look to make sure I was leaving nothing else of importance behind, I locked the safe, drew off its key from the bunch, and dropped the other keys on the floor beside the stunned man, slipped quietly out of the room and out of the house.

Instead of returning to my hotel, I made my way down to the harbor. I did not dare to risk trying to get a train. In the harbor I hired a small fishing boat with a sail, and put straight out to sea. It was on the tossing waters of the Cattegat by moonlight that I took in the provisions of the extraordinary compact between the Norwegian conspirators and their imperial ally.

The document had been carefully drawn up, evidently with an eye to the public opinion of Europe, which would naturally be scandalized by an alliance between the great Slav despotism and a Teutonic commonwealth.

The treaty began by reciting that the Union between Sweden and Norway had been forced on the Norwegians against their will, by the Swedes aided by Russia's authority. It went on to state that the union had failed to benefit either country, and that Russia had consented to undo her past injury to Norway by helping her to annul the bond.

Then followed the particulars of the aid to be rendered. Norway pledged herself not to make any open move till the signal was given from Petersburg, which was to be as soon as Finland had settled down into the condition of a Russian province. In the meantime the Norwegians were to strengthen themselves in every possible way, and to keep up a constant pressure of agitation against Sweden.

As soon as all was ready, the Norwegian Storthing was to meet in secret session and proclaim Norway a free and independent republic, under the protection of the tsar, and [illegible] her troops on the frontier. Two Russian army corps were to be ready in Finland, on the pretext of maneuvers, and these were to be hurled across the frontier to the north of the Gulf of Bothnia. At the same time the Russian fleet was to cross the Baltic, occupy the Island of Gothland, and blockade Stockholm and the Swedish ports.

All these measures were to be taken merely as precautions. If the Swedes accepted the inevitable, the Russians were to retire again. If the Swedes took up arms, war was to be declared, and Russia was to annex Gothland to her empire, the Norwegians [illegible] territory in the north.

And what was the price which the Tsar was to receive for this friendly demonstration? It was not a nominal one. The Norwegian republic bound itself to grant to his imperial majesty a lease for twenty-five years—that is to say, forever—of a warm-water port on the Atlantic ocean, to be used as a depot and coaling station for the Russian fleet.

It was the dream of six generations of Muscovite statesmen realized at last. Russia, with one foot on the Atlantic and another on the Pacific, would dominate the Old World.

All that night the fishing boat carried me along in the track of the Baltic steamers. At dawn I boarded

"Let me see your warrant," I said.

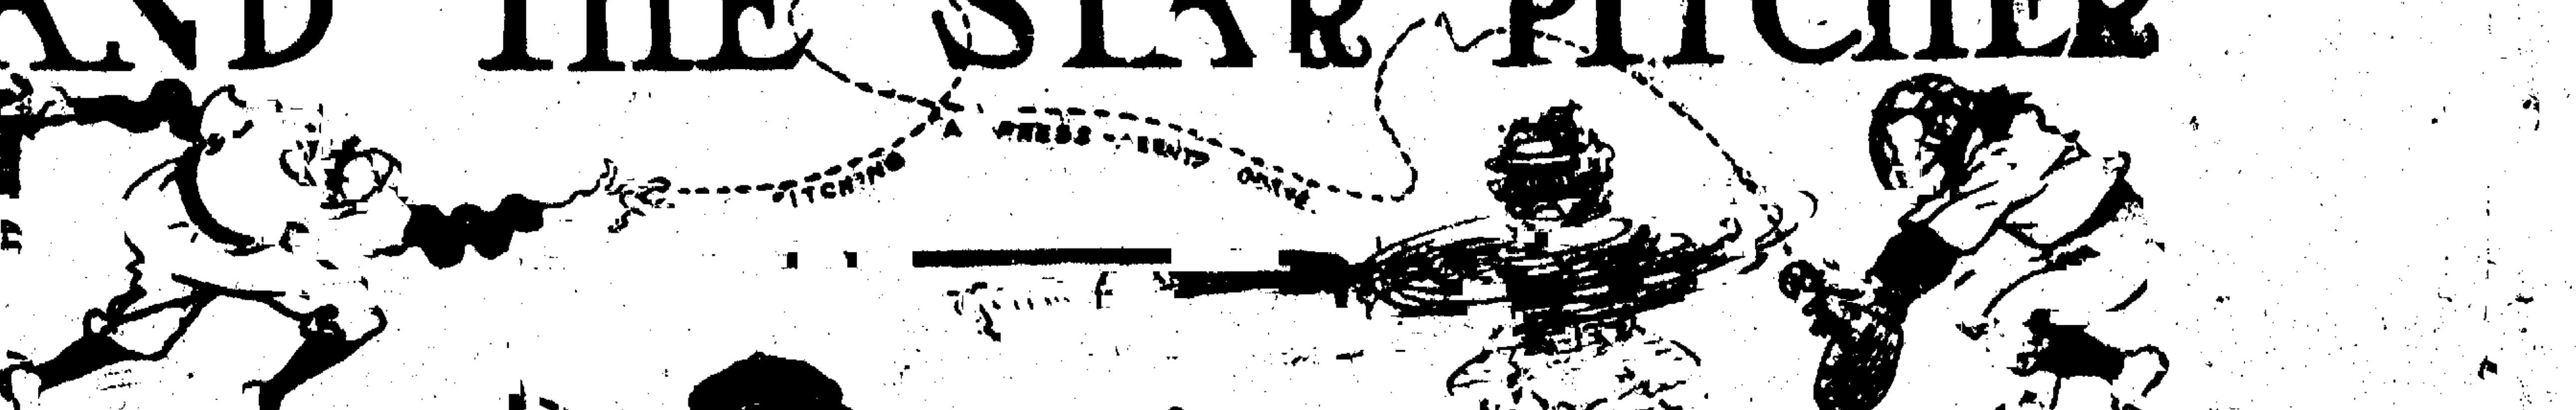
BRAINS AND THE STAR PITCHER



Both are members of the same secret society

McGinnity and his under-hand-raised ball.

"Cheese it, Tony. I'm the man who makes your reputation for you."

Watching the College boys for new material.

If He Is to Do Good Work and Last, His Arm Must Be Backed Up By An Active Head Many Pitchers With Poor Mechanical Ability Who Are Stars Because of Their Head Work—The Pitcher a Living Refutation of the Charge That Baseball Does Not Require Mental Ability Anecdotes Which Show How Pitchers Are Constantly Called Upon to Use Their Brains The Prominent Part Which the Catcher Plays in Making the Pitcher's Reputation Different Ways of Discovering Pitchers, and a Few Words About the Balls They Pitch.

By

Gui T.

[illegible]

"GRIFFITH has always been a pitcher, and one of the very best, simply because he is a brainy pitcher, and uses his head as well as the physical ability with which he is so eminently supplied. Griffith has lasted as a pitcher as long as he has because he has used his brain."

There you have it in the words of a leading baseball authority. A pitcher must be a man of head as well as arm; a pitcher is a living refutation of the old charge that baseball is a game requiring only nimble legs and sharp eyes to play it.

And that's right.

McGinnity, of the champion Giants, was pitching against the Cincinnati Reds. Miller Huggins got in a scratch hit over to end field. The next time Huggins came to the bat McGinnity gave the sign for an outcurve. The ball was knocked into the left fielder's hands, he did not have to move a step. When Huggins picked up the stick for the third time, McGinnity again signed for an outcurve and again the ball soared into the left fielder's hands.

It takes brains to control the ball in this fashion, for control of the sphere means knowledge of cause and effect, and arm alone cannot impart this knowledge.

"Smiling Mickey" Welsh will always be remembered in New York as one of the two men who won the pennant for the metropolis in 1889, "Tim" Keefe being the other. "Mickey" had a slow ball that was almost unhittable. In addition he had a way of ceaselessly smiling while in the box deliberate delivery and studied grin so tantalized the batsmen that most of them would lose their patience and temper and hit at the sphere too soon or too late, with the customary fatal results.

Here were head and arm combined.

Talk to any old player about the man in the box and before long he will be telling you of pitchers who have lost their mechanical ability long since, but are still in the game. Express astonishment at this revelation, and the reply will come forth:

"[illegible] they [illegible] good head work. They don't depend on their arms alone. They couldn't. But they win splendid victories where pitchers equipped with splendid arms only couldn't, simply because they study the situation and act in the light of it."

Quite frequently these men of head find recourse in displaying immaculate gall, to the disgust, anger and finally [illegible] of their opponents. [illegible] they do not pitch a single ball without having a certain purpose in mind. In this they are like the [illegible] pitcher with tip-top mechanical [illegible], if there is a man on first [illegible] or second, [illegible] that he would [illegible] field [illegible].

It takes head to know how different kinds of balls act under constantly varying circumstances and which kind to throw and where to throw at the psychological moment. It takes head to realize the effect of each different sort of ball on the man. It takes head [illegible] that the arm will [illegible] at a critical moment. [illegible] be controlled without [illegible] book learning can [illegible] study as we all know [illegible] takes brains. Not [illegible] perfect [illegible] thrown [illegible] McGinnity who [illegible] secret of the underhand raised [illegible] the greater part of four years [illegible]. He says that he consumed more grey matter over [illegible] problem than he has over any other [illegible] thing to date. "Billy" Rhines, of [illegible], who partially mastered this ball ten years ago, wrinkled his brows over it constantly [illegible] had to give up the task, [illegible] he could not [illegible]. "Billy" had a wonder[illegible].

Practically every ball other than the straight ball has been brought forth as [illegible] of accident has partially led to its discovery, study alone has developed it; the spit ball, for example.

Where the Catcher Comes In.

"The pitcher is the most important factor in the actual game of baseball," says a high authority. "He is 80 per cent. of the team. A star pitcher can win with a mediocre team back of him."

It is head as well as arm that makes this true to a great extent. But now altogether, for no matter how wonderful an arm a pitcher may be blessed with, or how active a head, he is always dependent, to a certain degree on the catcher for his reputation.

It is this way: A pitcher, by reason of his position, has the greater part of the diamond at his back most of the time. But the entire field is spread out constantly before the catcher's eyes; it is as a map unrolled before him. He knows the positions of the various players at all times; he is able to note, instantly, any tendency toward a change. He is supposed to know, better than anyone else, the failings of the different batsmen. Therefore, a pitcher time and again depends upon the catcher to give the signs for the balls which in his judgment will produce the best results under the circumstances. If the catcher's judgment is good, up goes the pitcher in public estimation; if poor, thumbs down for the man in the box.

Shortly after Frank Hahn joined the Cincinnati Reds, he was put in the box to pitch against Delehanty, Lajoie, McFarland, Wolverton and other 300 per cent hitters. Hahn was a youngster from the old Western league; "Heiny" Peitz, the Reds' catcher, was an old stager and acquainted with the devious ways of the heavy hitters. He gave Hahn the signs for every ball; next morning the Cincinnati papers hailed with paroxysms of delight the youngster who had not given Delehanty et al. a single hit in nine innings.

Pitchers generally recognise the position that the men who catch their deliveries occupy toward them. So do the catchers. When "Tony" Mullane was twirling for the reds and the late "Kid" Baldwin was his partner, it was not an uncommon occurrence for "Tony" to rush up to "Kid" after the game and exclaim, hotly:

"You threw me down! You knew he could hit that ball!"

And Baldwin would coolly reply, as he tugged at a stocking:

"Cheese it, 'Tony,' I'm the man who makes your reputation for you."

On the whole, pitcher and catcher are usually on excellent terms and, quite frequently are cronies. Matthewson and Bowerman, of the champion Giants, are examples. They are known among their team-mates as inseparables; what's one's, 'tother's; and, besides swearing fealty in the ordinary way, both are members of the same secret society lodge.

If this friendly condition did not prevail, the lot of the manager would be a great deal more arduous than it now is; for, among other things, every pitcher knows that his catcher watches him with an eagle eye in the preliminary work-out, and if he does not come up to his usual form therein, the manager's attention is called to the fact, with the result generally that another pitcher is ordered into the box at the last minute.

Discovering New Twirlers.

Many stories are told of the efforts of team managers and magnates to secure new pitchers, one of the best is from the lips of Charley W. Murphy, assistant secretary of the New York Baseball club.

During the course of one of the seasons when Mr. Murphy was sporting editor of a Cincinnati paper, he soon noticed that among the telegraphic reports of baseball games played throughout the state there were always sure to be two or three a week telling of the pitching prowess of a certain Amos Scott. One night the account would run in some such fashion as this: "Amos Scott pitched today for Bethel and defeated the Batavia team, striking out nineteen men and allowing the Batavians only three safe hits." Two or three nights later the account of Scott's feats would be even more glowing. Naturally, in the course of time Mr. Murphy conceived a great respect for Mr. Amos Scott and his good right arm.

About the middle of the season the Reds, Mr. Murphy's home team, struck a bad streak. Try as they would, the boys were unable to shake off the hoodoo pursuing them. Everybody was in despair, when a news report from Bethel suddenly reminded Mr. Murphy of the redoubtable Amos Scott. Straightway he sought out Mr. John T. Brush, the Red's owner.

"Look here, Mr. Brush," said Mr. Murphy, "I think I know the man who can pull the Reds out of the hole they are in."

"Tell me about him—quick!" shouted Mr. Brush.

"Send to Bethel for Amos Scott," was the answer, as the editor spread before the magnate's eyes the sporting pages recounting the wondrous feats of Amos Scott, of Bethel.

That day an emissary was dispatched to Bethel to make terms with its great pitcher, and in less than a week he was in the city, a full-fledged Cincinnati Red.

The night before he was going to accompany the team east, where he was to make his bow as a major leaguer, Amos Scott dropped in to thank Mr. Murphy for suggesting his name to Mr. Brush. Grateful to the core, he took up a valuable half-hour of his benefactor's time, then started to go, when Mr. Murphy bethought himself of a question—a natural one for an editor to ask.

"By the way, do you know our correspondent in Bethel?" mentioning his name.

"Do I?" grinned Amos Scott. "Sure! I'm your correspondent there—that is, I was till I came here."

Suddenly a great light dawned on Mr. Murphy. Dazzled by it for a moment, he sat silent. Then he said, as he reached out and shook Amos Scott's hand in farewell.

"Well, if you're half as good a pitcher as you are a press agent, you're a wonder."

"But," adds Mr. Murphy, with a far-away look in his eyes, whenever he tells the tale, "he was a frost."

This tale reveals the fact that there are many ways of discovering new pitchers. One of the surest is for the team manager to keep his eyes on the various occupants of the pitcher's box whenever his team goes on a barnstorming trip at the end of the season. Bob Ewing was found in this way at Wapakoneta, O., where, in the parlance of the game, he made monkeys out of the Queen City boys. Bob had not left the grounds after the game when he was asked to sign with the Reds. He is still with them and his arm is every bit as wonderful as it was during the game in which he caused the Reds to rub their eyes in sheer astonishment over his curves and their inability to find them. Year before last Bob gave the Giants only one hit in one of the games he pitched against them.

Of late years the managers have learned to watch the various college teams for promising material for the box. Mathewson, of the champion Giants, before he went to the Roanoke team, twirled the sphere for Bucknell college. He entered the National league by way of Cincinnati, after he had earned the sobriquet of "The Wizard of the Minor Leagues." It is the exception when a college ball tosser graduates direct into a major league team, the big managers prefer to see him tried out first in a minor league. But the moment he proves his college prowess not ephemeral, that moment he becomes an object of intense interest to major league managers.

Not infrequently a major discovers that a rival has failed to realize the potential twirling powers of a certain pitcher, and a dicker is slyly entered into by the discoverer which puts him in possession of the player, to the subsequent sorrow of the other. A case in point is that of Frank Hahn. When he was in the Detroit team of the old Western league he was looked upon as a fair pitcher. Along came the Reds one day; their manager sized up Frank and the possibilities that lay dormant within him, and in a short while numbered him among his players. Frank speedily proved himself to be a star southpaw.

The moral of this is that sometimes it is not necessary for a manager to look further than his nose for a "discovery" that will make the bleachers ring with shouts of hilarious joy.

Balls That Are Pitched.

Whenever a bonafide discovery is made numerous tales always follow of the new and passing strange sorts of balls the "discovery" can pitch—balls which will surely revolutionize the game. Let it all be set down to advertising purposes. Many of the different sorts of balls which are supposed to emanate from the pitcher's box are thrown from the fertile brains of press agents, and nowhere else. Here is a list of the different balls actually being pitched today, some, of course, having their variations:

The out curve, first of the curved balls.

The in-shoot, which next developed.

The drop ball, which followed the in-shoot.

The fast straight ball, the slow ball, which appeared when pitchers began to use their heads as well as their arms.

The under-hand raised ball, which only McGinnity, of the champion Giants, has mastered.

Cutting the corners, dating back about fifteen years, a [illegible] cross-fire delivery which is pitched by very few twirlers.

The spit ball, of recent origin and much potency.

This list was furnished by one of the leading pitchers of the country and a second [illegible]. Both asked that their names be not used. "We don't want to get a bad repute with our fellow twirlers," was the excuse they offered.

NATIONAL LEAGUE NEARLY LOST THE IRON MAN ONCE

"Stub" Ryan, the veteran baseball player, got wound up the other day in a reminiscent mood and reeled off this contribution to the short story ranks:

"Didn't I ever tell you about the time that the National league came near losing the Iron Man McGinnity? No? Well, this'll be it:

"You know, McGinnity is a steady sort of a party with a little money in the bank and a little property lying around loose in the Indian territory. Every season when the league games were over McGinnity would duck out to the Indian territory and dig coal in his mine. Mac'll have hard coal to eat when all the rest of us are chewing [illegible].

"One season, when he was Brooklyn's star exhibit at about $6,000 per, Mac took an idea that he would like to miss out on the spring practice. He wrote the management, stating that he would get into shape at home and report just before the season opened. That sort of a letter wouldn't get Rube Waddell anything, but they knew McGinnity to be a man of his word, so he got the permission to stay at home and train in his mine.

"Mac lived at South McAlester and McAlester proper had a real baseball team. One Sunday they were slated to play a match game at Shawnee, and the old iron man, who felt that he would like to play one practice game, told the manager of the McAlester team that he would pitch provided they did not tip his name off.

"'You're on,' said the McAlester manager, and next Sunday they harnessed the great pitcher into a McAlester uniform and trotted him out to do the pitching. The entire population of Shawnee turned out to pipe the game and McGinnity was introduced to them under the safe monacher of Bill Smith of Kansas.

"McGinnity didn't want to make it too strong, so he started out easy. The first man up he hit with an inshoot and the next man up took a walk. The Shawnee crowd began to howl like Injuns.

"'Take him out!' they yelled. 'Raus mit him! We don't want a walkover, we want a real game! Smith, you're [illegible]. Back to Kansas!' Put a pitcher [illegible] more stuff than I [illegible] you wouldn't dare [illegible].

"All this roasting made the iron man sore as a dog. It was a ne[illegible]tion for him to be hooted and hissed, and I guess he didn't enjoy it any too much.

"He called the catcher into the diamond.

"'Can you stop 'em?' says the iron man, 'because I'm going to show these hay miners some real big league baseball!'

"'Which if I can't stop 'em, I'll surely try my darnedest!' says the catcher, grinning.

"McGinnity went back into the box and began to shoot them over like so many shots out of a Winchester. I'll swear those Shawnee players didn't any more than just hear the ball whiz! The next three men never got a chance and the umpire lost his voice just yelling 'STRIKE!'

"McGinnity fanned 18 men that day and after the first inning only two men got to first base. The old iron man was the whole show and the way he slew those farmer players was a shame to see!

"After the game old Fighting Dad Sparks, who runs a cheap restaurant in Shawnee and manages the baseball team on the side, approached McGinnity with his hat in his hand.

"'How much be them McAlester sports paying you, Mister Smith?' says Dad.

"Mac tumbled right away and began to fan a little.

"'Well, you see, sir,' says the iron man, 'I ain't what you might call a regular member of the team. I'm only a volunteer.'

"'Yes,' says Sparks, 'I could tell you was a bit green and maybe you ain't had much experience, but I can l'arn you lots of tricks and then you'll be good enough to get into the Texas league, mebbe. They pay as much as $150 a month! But, honest now, how much are you gettin'?'

"'Well,' says McGinnity, 'being that I ain't more than a kind of a substitute I get $5 a Sunday for pitching.'

"'Well, young man,' says Sparks, 'I'm willing to do what's real handsome by you. I've got a restaurant here in town and I'll give you a job waiting on table. You get $3 a week and all your tips on the side—mebbe $2 more. And that ain't all I'll give you,' says Sparks, swelling up like a second Carnegie, 'I'll give you $6 in money for every game you pitch. We play most every Sunday.'

"And the funny part of it was that Fighting Dad kept after Mac for three weeks with letters and messages and finally the iron man had to skip to Brooklyn to get away from him. And that's how near the Nationals came to losing their $6,000 pitcher!"

EDDIE HANLON AFTER BRITT

AFTER DEFEATING CORBETT, HE IS CONFIDENT OF WRESTING LIGHTWEIGHT HONORS FROM BRITT.

Eddie Hanlon sizes up the pugilistic situation, with reference to his own aspirations, as follows:

"Let Britt agree to make 132 at the ringside and I will be ready to sign articles. I will be frank in discussing this match. At first I thought Britt on account of his larger experience and a certain cleverness, would be a wee bit too much for me, but since my fight with Corbett I have carefully thought matters over and have come to the conclusion that I have an equal chance with him in the ring.

"I don't think there is a little man in the business who can punch as hard as Young Corbett. I know Britt can not deliver the powerful blow that enabled Corbett to put Terry McGovern to sleep, and I am sure that Britt hasn't got the punch that so badly addled my pate in the fight with Corbett.

"Britt has been meeting and beating so-called clever men. He went twenty rounds with Corbett and got a decision which I think was fairly earned. I went twenty rounds with Corbett when he was at the height of his career, and Eddie Graney made no bones about stating that he would have given that fight to me but for the fact that Rothwell was a champion and he didn't want to take his laurels away unless he was sure no question would be raised.

"I feel that between Jimmy and myself it is an even break, and if we sign up you will see quite a little bunch of Eddie's coin on the short end, for I am certain that if we go into the ring they will make Britt an odds-on favorite over me."

BASE-STEALING AN IMPORTANT FACTOR IN WINNING GAMES

Some of the wisest managers in the big leagues are bending every energy in perfecting the base-stealing tactics of their men. More work is being done in this branch of the sport than has been before for years.

The steal is worked both with and without the hit-and-run game. One point that is raised is that there is no use in throwing away a sprint in case the batter-up fails to reach the ball on the hit-and-run game. Make the steal a steal in every sense of the word every time the signal is given, and if, when half way down, the bat cracks, keep upright for the extra base, but if it does not take to the dirt for the safe slide. The advantage is that frequently a man may get in safe on a mix-up. The chances are that if the batter can not reach the ball and it is not a foul it will be in the nature of a wild pitch, which spoils the throw just enough to let the runner slip in safe. If the runner is safe at second he stands all the chances in the world of coming home on a single.

Another point, which has been suggested before, is the influence of the "spit ball." If the hit-and-run game, which frequently depends on a nicely laid-down bunt, is broken up by it and the free stickers come in to take the place of the bunt artists, the team which gets its runs over the pan must be the team thoroughly up to date.

Once on first, by hook or crook, pass, hit or by pitched ball, the runner must be able to rely on himself when it is necessary to discard the hit-and-run game. Up-to-date base stealing is the way for the runner to do it, the managers hold.

The strict enforcement of the balk rule, which is like tying a pitcher's leg and telling him to put the ball over, will have its effect. It is of a pure and distinct advantage to a runner and his base running. The fact, too, that the "spit ball," in breaking, breaks low, means that a catcher must go close to the ground for it and come up with his short-arm throw. [illegible] McGinnity in his underhand work, and it has been a long day since any one saw a catcher throw underhand!

All this going low must slow up the throw a fraction of a second, which adds to the runner's favorable chances of making his steal. It will not take the base runners long to ascertain which of the twirlers depends on the "spit ball" and how much he uses it and when. Then, if it breaks either way, right or left, the catcher will be off his feet if he has to go in toward the right-hand hitter for it on an inbreak and come out and up for his throw.

After a study of conditions it looks as if a man with a style of taking the extra bags will be right in his prime this season. He is not the kind of runner who reaches a base standing up, but is fascinated by the idea of hitting the dirt and closing in on the bag low with the swing around out of danger. It looks to many as if there might be a return of the old style of game which was so popular when the game was won and lost on pure long-distance hitting and on the bases. If that is so, there need be no regret over the coming of the "spit ball" or the strict balk rules and the vanishing of the bunt, and even the hit-and-run game.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

NEW PULLMAN CAR SERVICE BETWEEN DENVER AND PORTLAND.

Commencing Tuesday, June 20, the Denver & Rio Grande railroad, in connection with the Oregon Short Line and the Oregon Railway and Navigation company, will establish a daily line of Pullman Standard Sleeping cars between Denver and Portland, Oregon. On Denver & Rio Grande trains Nos. 1 and 2, on which these cars are handled are operated the new open-top observation cars through the Royal Gorge, also the Denver & Rio Grande's famous dining cars.

The attention of all concerned is called to the fact that this car in the westbound movement lays over at Salt Lake City from 1:25 p. m. until 11:45 p. m. and on the eastbound movement from 8:30 a. m. to [illegible] p. m., thus giving passengers on this through car an opportunity to spend a few hours in Salt Lake City.

This new and improved service will prove a great advantage and convenience for passengers en route to and from the Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland.

For space in this car apply to any Denver & Rio Grande agent.

SMALL SHIPPERS SHOWING UP WELL

NEARLY ALL LESSEES OF THE CRIPPLE CREEK DISTRICT GETTING GOOD RESULTS.

Special to Sunday Gazette and Telegraph.

CRIPPLE CREEK, June 17.—The Western Investment company, operating a part of the Specimen claim belonging to the Stratton Cripple Creek Mining and Development company, on Bull hill, has about completed the work of installing machinery and building ore bins and expect to be pushing active mining operations now before long.

The cyanide mill being constructed on the Los Angeles claim on Bull hill is nearing completion and it is expected that active work will shortly be started and that the gold contained in all the low grade ores there will be recovered with a good profit both to the lessees and the owners.

J. M. [illegible] operating the Dante under lease, is pushing development in [illegible] parts of the mine and a small [illegible] of ore is being mined during the course of prospecting.

INERTIA IN WALL STREET COMPLETE

SMALL BUSINESS YESTERDAY, CLOSED DULL WEEK—READING STOCK LOST A POINT.

NEW YORK, June 17.—Small business for today's half session closed a dull week on the stock exchange and afforded no relief to the existing stagnant conditions. The most significant feature was the loss of nearly a point in Reading, which was the only stock to show any activity or strength yesterday. This was the index of the day's whole movement.

Declines of varying fractions are the rule. The quasi fictitious nature of the transactions by the professional traders seems to be absolutely without a sustaining basis in any actual business either by sellers or buyers of stocks.

The inertia of the market is complete, except for timid ventures by a small remnant of traders. There was some discussing of the reported friction between Germany and France over their relations towards Morocco. But it was said that not over 500 shares were traded in here for foreign account until today in the execution.

The greater speculative activity in the markets for commodities gives greater opportunity and helps to divert attention from stocks. The heavy tone of the market was accentuated to a very slight extent after the issue of the bank statement. The increase in deposits was principally due to loan expansion and while the reserve requirement was thus increased some $4,112,000, the cash increase amounted to only $1,497,000. The result was a shrinkage in the surplus of $2,615,000 to $7,-[illegible]

The activity in Japan 4½ certificates continued but the narrow range made them less attractive for trading operations than on yesterday. Total sales of bonds, par value, $2,355,000.

Furnished by Otis & Hough, bankers and brokers.

CHICAGO STOCKS ALL SHOW GAINS

COLD CROP WEATHER MADE WHEAT STRONG.—CORN, OATS AND PROVISIONS ALL UP.

CHICAGO, June 17.—Continued cold in the northwest started a covering by shorts in the wheat pit here today and caused a strong finish. The July delivery was up an even cent at the close. Corn is up ⅝@⅞c. Oats showed a gain of ⅝@⅞c. Provisions are up 5 to 10c. Strength in the wheat market developed late in the session. At the start sentiment was quite bearish and initial quotations on July were off ⅛ to ¼ to ⅜@⅝ at 87⅝ to 88. Weakness at the opening was due to reports of excellent weather for harvesting throughout the southwest. In addition advices of good yields of wheat gave bears incentive to sell. Many traders who bought yesterday were today eager to dispose of holdings.

As a result prices declined, July closing off to 87¾. During the last half of the session sentiment suddenly turned to bullishness, the market becoming extremely strong. The principal reason for the change in sentiment was fear for the spring-sown crop, fresh advices from Minneapolis telling of additional damage by unfavorable weather conditions. From St. Louis came a dispatch claiming that recent heavy rains in Kansas had greatly damaged the wheat crop. Alarmed by these reports, shorts made an attempt to cover sales, but offerings were lacking. The result was a quick advance which carried the price of July up to 89[illegible]@⅝. Commission houses were active buyers late in the session. The market closed nearly at the top price of the day, final quotations on July being at 89½@⅝.

Strength of wheat caused a sharp upturn in corn prices. The market closed at practically the highest point of the day. July opened unchanged to ⅛ lower at 52⅝ to 52⅞, sold up to 53⅞ and closed at 53⅝@⅞.

The oats market was depressed early but later became firm. July opened a shade to ⅛@¼ lower at 30⅞ to 31, sold up to 31⅝ and closed at the top.

Provisions were firm on a fair demand from packers. Offerings were light. At the close September pork was up 10c at $13.10. Lard was up 5c at $7.52½. Ribs were 10c higher at $7.85@$7.87½.

KING OF SPAIN WON HEARTS OF EUROPEANS

LONDON, June 17.—The nineteen-year-old King of Spain, who has left here to return to his own country, won the hearts of all while here. The sportsmen here are yet speaking in terms of admiration and the excellence of his attainments. A little curiosity was no doubt mixed with the desire to do honor to a foreign potentate, on account of the continued rumors that an English princess is destined to be the future queen of Spain.

It is difficult sometimes to remember that it is a little more than two centuries ago since Spain was the greatest power in the Old World and in the New, but Spain was triumphant only so long as the world was to be conquered by the sword. Now that swords are beaten into plough-shares she is lost in the industrial race. There are however, unmistakable signs of improvement, and it may be possible that in the near future, the corruptions which have so crippled Spanish governmental and commercial life may be remedied.

No words can too strongly express the wisdom with which the queen mother has fulfilled her difficult task, and the way in which she has with a strong hand steered the helm of state clear of political entanglements.

"ISIDRO."

"Isidro," by Mary Austin. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers, New York. [illegible]

Mrs. Austin's writing [illegible] picturesque and vigorous [illegible] reader is likely to forget the great forest fire in the climax of the story.

The illustrations in colors by [illegible] Pape are particularly successful, as he is a Californian himself and has made a careful study of the early Spanish-American period.

AMANDA OF THE MILL.

"Amanda of the Mill," by Marie Van Vorst. Dodd, Mead & Co., publishers, New York. Price $1.50 net.

"Amanda of the Mill" is the title of a new novel by Marie Van Vorst, author of "The Woman Who Toils." The new book is a strong piece of fiction describing conditions in Southern mill life and the employment of child labor by southern mill owners. The story is not exactly one of the present but of the past. If labor reports are to be believed things are not so bad as the book pictures them.

Amanda, the heroine of the book, is a girl of 16 when the story opens, a "poor white trash child" of South Carolina, ignorant, untrained, yet not without native refinement. Like hundreds of other children of these southern towns she was drawn into the mill and here is seen the life of struggle. The author's description of the mill and the relation it bears to these poor, wild, uneducated people is powerful in the extreme.

Amanda worked beyond her strength and fell ill. The wife of the mill owner rescued her from the place, made a companion of her and gave her the advantages of [illegible] At her death she bequeathed a fortune to Amanda. Henry Euston, a drunken [illegible] at the beginning of the story [illegible] hand and later [illegible] ed as the son of the wicked [illegible] mill owner.

The book [illegible] from [illegible] full of pictures too [illegible] [illegible] pathetic. "Amanda of the Mill" though a story of the [illegible] Ridge mountains and [illegible] of class struggle, has a [illegible] as the champion of the [illegible] and its needs of [illegible] ness.

"THE VISION OF ELIJAH BERL."

"The Vision of Elijah Berl," [illegible] Little, Brown & Co., publishers [illegible]

Elijah Berl [illegible] Mr. Nash [illegible] who [illegible] dreams of [illegible] "Blossom [illegible] of [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] his study of character. Elijah Berl is [illegible] the only notable picture in this portrait gallery. Ralph Whiston is a man who does things, is conscientious in all his thoughts and actions, one that appeals to everyone. Helen [illegible] is a sort of superior stenographer and all around business woman. But that is about all, for she fails to be interesting.

Berl's wife is a foolish, doll-like creature with a great deal of love for her husband, but fails to hold him to her court because of her inability to understand and enter into problems which command his time and his thought.

ANOTHER WESTERN STORY

"Jesse [illegible] Ranchman," by [illegible] Little, Brown & Co., publishers, Boston. Price $1.50 net.

"The [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] writer [illegible] [illegible] story has [illegible] [illegible] beast.

The story [illegible] as abundant love interest, also a strong political element, dealing with Colorado politics and the fight between cattlemen and irrigationists to control the legislature, in which the hero becomes the storm center. The author is not so happy in his love stories as in his politics and adventure and the reader has the unusual impulse to skip the loves of the story and devote his attention to the strenuous life.

NOVELIZING UNION LABOR

Many readers of Leroy Scott's novel "The Walking Delegate," struck by some apparent points of similarity between Buck Foley, the walking delegate of the story, and the late Sam Parks, have asked if Foley is not merely Parks under a thin disguise. Mr. Scott in a letter to his publishers on this point, says:

I have taken the union Parks once mastered because I was fascinated by the dangerous trade of the men who erect the steel framework of sky-scrapers, and I have made free use of the situation that existed in the union at the time of Park's supremacy. I have taken Parks' setting and made it the setting of Buck Foley, but Buck Foley is not Sam Parks. With one or two exceptions, and those very subordinate, the incidents in which Foley figures are not taken from Parks' life, and as for character, I think the affect their similarity in ruthless power may be a recorded, likewise between the two ends. I never spoke to Parks and never saw him but once, and that after he had fallen from his high estate, at his trial, when he was only a [illegible] remnant of his boastful prime.

"Parks was [illegible] [illegible]

"PLUM TREE" CHARACTERS

A good [illegible] trying to identify the originals of some of the characters of David Graham Phillips' "The Plum Tree," a book which just now seems to be having a wider vogue. For instance, the portrait of President [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Phillips' [illegible] [illegible] rates for points on politics [illegible] characteristic that his characters are composite and separate traits may readily be fastened on separate men. If, for example, Mr. Hanna contributed much to the making of Sayler, it seems likely that Mr. Aldrich contributed to Singleton. A article by Mr. Phillips on Senator Aldrich, entitled "The Boss of the United States," created something of a stir a year or two ago, and what better name could be found for Sayler than the title of that article?—The Bookman.

ADMIRATION AND ADMONITION.

When D. Appleton & Company, publishers of Jones' Mr. Roberts, [illegible] [illegible] received in regard to the novel [illegible] one of those delivery [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] book.

"Mr. [illegible] [illegible] and your whimsy so fine. But you shouldn't have introduced that touch about the mortgage; your method of instruction is so much better."

The little criticisms or witticisms [illegible] out to Barnard Haw and others are especially delightful," writes a man from Portland, Maine.

"Please, dear kind Mr. Robert Chambers, don't forget that there are yet four charming daughters of the gentle [illegible] left whom you have not yet married off," writes a [illegible] admirer from Chicago.

"I thank [illegible] [illegible] thing [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] of giving it to us in [illegible] [illegible] for the dairy-house, I don't believe that it has ever been touched [illegible] the [illegible] land of [illegible]

"Bless you for [illegible] thoughts," [illegible] the entire staff of the Detroit Free Press. The letter is signed by fifteen men.

Another letter from Chicago contains a bit of description. "When I find one of your delightful creations," it says, "I get a light, settle down in my big armchair, put my feet well up to another, and read that story every word of it, regretting that soon must it come to an end."

We shall be there at least an hour, and we wish to be quite alone, as I have many things of importance to say." As soon as he was gone, Judge Alvord rose to his feet, and said, in a mimicking feminine voice: "Gentlemen, I am going to the bar, and I shall be there at least an hour. I wish to be quite alone, as I shall have many important things to drink." However, in the rough-and-tumble camaraderie of the tour, the Hon. H. H. Heathcote turned out to be quite a good fellow.

Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons will shortly produce a volume from the pen of Mr. Henry Wellington Wack, treating of the romantic attachment of Victor Hugo and Juliette Drouet. Recently Mr. Wack while staying in Guernsey had the good fortune to discover a budget of letters addressed to the great French poet by Juliette Drouet. Mr. Wack has embodied Madame Drouet's letters in an interesting sketch of Victor Hugo's life at Guernsey, where the master's long exile was spent and the scene of his most active literary period. Those love letters, which are about to be given to the world for the first time, are the [illegible] which inspired so many of the Hugo letters published in France. The significance of Mr. Wack's discovery is [illegible] France, and M. HARP SEALS.

The aquarium received recently a pair of [illegible] seals. These [illegible] at the request of Director Townsend, by one of Job Bros.' steamers of the Newfoundland sealing fleet on the ice to the northward of Newfoundland, and brought down to St. John's, N. F., and thence [illegible] to New York.

The harp seals [illegible] [illegible] March. They are little more than [illegible] old, but they are bigger than the harbor seals [illegible] about [illegible] [illegible] The harp seal grows [illegible] about six feet long.

The harp seal [illegible] [illegible]

The young seal [illegible] born [illegible] [illegible] part of March, is at first of a pure white color. It grows very rapidly, attaining half its full growth within three months. It is able to shift for itself when the ice floes break up. The harp seal takes its name from a harp-shaped blotch that appears later on its sides, the seal taking darker colors as it grows older.

The two large seals at the aquarium were brought down from St. John's each in a cask [illegible] which they could be supplied with water, while through openings in the [illegible] of the casks they got their supplies of air. Occasionally on the voyage they were allowed on deck for exercise. They were characteristically seal like in appearance, but, while already larger than their harbor seal companions in the pool, they have smaller heads. One of the young harp seals is already sufficiently tame to take food from the hand.—New York Sun.

ECZEMA [illegible]

Those afflicted with Eczema know more than can be told of the suffering imposed by this "flesh fire." It usually begins with a slight redness of the skin, which gradually spreads, followed by blisters and pustules discharging a thin, sticky fluid that dries and scales off, leaving an inflamed surface, and at times the itching and burning are almost unbearable. While any part of the body is liable to be attacked, the hands, feet, back, arms, face and legs are the parts most often affected. The cause of Eczema is a [illegible] acid condition of the blood. The circulation becomes loaded with fiery, acid poisons that are forced through the glands and pores of the skin which set the flesh aflame. Since the cause of the disease is in the blood it is a waste of time to try to cure it with local applications, the cause must be removed before a cure can be effected. S. S. S. has no equal as a remedy for Eczema; it enters the blood and forces out the poison through the natural channels, and builds up the entire system. The skin becomes smooth and soft again and the Eczema is cured. Cases that have persistently refused to be cured under the ordinary treatment yield to its purifying, cooling effect on the blood. Book on Skin Diseases and any advice wished, without charge.

Eczema made its appearance on my left limb the size of my thumb in 1893, and spread until it was large as my hand, burning, itching and paining me, and for which I could get no relief, until seeing the other cures advertised by you I wrote and secured the advice of your physicians, commenced S. S. S. and it cured me.

ADVENTURES OF THE HOBO

Typical Happenings to the Man "Who Goes Around the Country Looking for Work and Praying to God He Won't Find It"—How Seventeen Hungry Hoboes Thought to Breakfast on a New Food and Found They Were Eating Sawdust—A Pleasant Winter's Experience in the Gallitzin Tunnel and Its Well-Nigh Fatal Aftermath—A Fight for Life on Floating Ice in the Missouri, Which Put Good Money Into a Hobo's Pocket—How the Farmers of the Northwest Humor and Coddle the Hobo Around Wheat-Harvest Time—Fooling the Brakies, Riding the Rods, and Working the Soft-Hearted State of Pennsylvania.

A hobo is a man who is always going about the country looking for work and praying to God that he won't find it. A bum is a man who never looks for work and never gets it. A panhandler is a mean cuss who puts up a ghost story when he is able to work. I'm a hobo, thank the Lord.

THE man who prefaced his remarks in this fashion swore that the adventures here appended are representative of those continually befalling the average hobo. "If you don't believe me," he said, "ask any other hobo who [illegible] around."

"I'll tell you what happened to [illegible] on my first trip as a hobo," he said. "That was in '87, and though I've been hoboing every day since and seen a good deal of the country east and west of the Mississippi, what happened to me when I started west [illegible] my raw and [illegible] simple [illegible] hap[illegible] very hob[illegible]

"We left New York [illegible] south [illegible] Kentucky [illegible] was with me. We walked the railway [illegible] fes[illegible] along [illegible] We opened the [illegible] there [illegible] fifteen of the scarediest look[illegible] hoboes [illegible] ever saw. They thought [illegible] brakies who had found them.

A Queer Breakfast Food

"Well, we got [illegible] there [illegible] morning [illegible] hungry as bears. [illegible] There were several hundred sacks [illegible] filled with something soft. [illegible] Kentucky was thinking of [illegible] [illegible] stuff that looked like [illegible] grou[illegible] meal. [illegible] looked at the stuff and said [illegible] breakfast just as soon as some hobo would get out of the car and start a fire and hunt up a tin can.

"An old dishpan was found alongside the track and Old Kentucky poured about half a sackful of this yellow stuff into it. Then he added some water from the running trough between the tracks and put the stuff over the fire to cook. It cooked [illegible] I got so hungry I dived [illegible] with the [illegible] of a stick on the [illegible] and drew out as much of the stuff as would stick and took a big mouthful. Lord, it was sawdust!

"But I swallowed it. Then I sat down to watch the fun begin, which it did in a few minutes after my pal yelled 'First call for breakfast in the dining car.' Every hobo but me made a grand dive for the stuff and I let on I was too. Then they all began eating and spitting and choking and gagging, and first thing I knew they were all pitching into Old Kentucky, who had his face all smeared with the breakfast [illegible] couldn't [illegible] That smear was what saved him. The other hoboes saw he was square and let up on him, and later on when some of them went out and found some [illegible] they divided with him [illegible] right.

Prison Doors Yawn

"W[illegible] other day [illegible] hitched on [illegible] Philly. When we [illegible] town we dropped [illegible] West Philadel[illegible] of us going [illegible] got to[illegible] [illegible] good meal [illegible] starting [illegible] when 'Hands up!' we heard somebody yell, and turning round we looked into the [illegible]

"[illegible] people were arresting all ho[illegible] [illegible]

"[illegible] Holmesburg [illegible] the first thing they [illegible] out.

"[illegible] Shut yer trap,' he said. 'And I [illegible] I worked [illegible] Holmesburg [illegible]

"[illegible] city to the [illegible] people,' he said, '[illegible] and say you'd like to get out [illegible] looking for [illegible] hoboes [illegible] [illegible] so good.'

"I did what he said, for I'd never been [illegible] before and didn't [illegible] I got in a sweat, but at the end of five weeks the keeper told me I could go. But first he took me into the room where the scales are kept and made me step on. He took a glance at the bar.

"'One seventy-four,' he yelled.

"'Look here,' I said. 'I weigh—'

"'Shut yer trap,' he said. '[illegible] go for [illegible] five weeks [illegible] you think we've got to [illegible] the [illegible] tax[illegible] of Philadelphia how we treat you hoboes while [illegible] and how you thrive [illegible]'

"I've found [illegible] that it's a common practice [illegible] weight in favor of the jail both when [illegible] coming [illegible] going out.

"My pal worked the same game. We got out at the same time, and hearing that there was plenty of work at Parkersburg we struck out for there. It took us two days to get [illegible] for the brakies were on the lookout and they [illegible] every hobo they spotted off the [illegible]. We were made to hit the grit [illegible] times. Twice we were thrown from moving box cars and once a brakie found us on top of a car and made us let go the ladder by following us down and trampling on our fingers. Then he threw ballast at him and took him [illegible] the car, and almost knocked him from the car. That's the way many brakies lose their balance, and one reason why [illegible] found injured alongside the tracks [illegible] offer.

"We stayed in Parkersburg doing odd jobs [illegible] along [illegible] the winter. Then we [illegible] west [illegible] When we struck the Gallitzin [illegible] other side of the Horse Bend [illegible] riding on the [illegible] of the first car back of the [illegible] his pal [illegible] hobo and my self. We were almost frozen when we got to the tunnel, but we had not got [illegible] hundred yards when we began to warm up comfortably all over. Lord, I said to myself, wish this tunnel ran all the way to Frisco. It [illegible] we began [illegible] at the other end we [illegible] But we had [illegible] long in the open where we [illegible] before we found out why we'd been so hot in the tunnel: the exhaust [illegible] of the engine had thrown steam [illegible] being in the dark we [illegible] known it. So before we'd go [illegible] little time to us [illegible] stiff from the frozen steam [illegible] and [illegible] fall [illegible] the bumpers right in front of [illegible] dagoes [illegible] alongside the track.

"Lucky for [illegible] where [illegible] did. Those dagoes took us into their shack, traveled [illegible] us in their spare [illegible] gave us [illegible] gallon [illegible] [illegible] and the next [illegible] happened [illegible] bluff.

A Battle With Ice

"[illegible] three [illegible] cent and [illegible] Chicago [illegible] and we both wanted to get across to Omaha to look for work. At that time it took twenty-five [illegible] to get across the railroad bridge and there was no other bri[illegible] and the railroad bridge had no foot-path. We couldn't steal a ride across; the lookout was too sharp. So we decided to go begging for money and [illegible] to the Union depot in Omaha later.

"I never was good at asking a man for money. This time, whenever I thought I had myself screwed up to ask for a quarter, I'd ask for some[illegible] to eat [illegible] had all [illegible] such truck [illegible] as good [illegible] At last I got enough nerve to ask some [illegible] quarter.

"'What you want it for?' he asked.

"[illegible] told him.

"'Walking's good,' he said.

"[illegible] for the first time I [illegible] that the Missouri was frozen. I [illegible] the [illegible] and started to walk [illegible] just above where the men [illegible] work on the new bridge were tossing [illegible] boats to one another. Maybe [illegible] half was [illegible] from [illegible] was overhead [illegible] maybe [illegible] could tell then there was a great [illegible] as if the world had [illegible] [illegible] had and the ice all about me heaved up and then sank, and I found myself standing on the edge of a big cake which was making down the river along with other big cakes, some as big as the side of a two-story frame house.

"There was nothing to do but to go on going, but I could [illegible] been just as risky. I jumped from cake to cake something I thought I'd never find [illegible] the [illegible] looked [illegible] But I kept on jumping [illegible] while [illegible] car[illegible] ried down stream, but all the time getting nearer to the Omaha shore.

"The last jump I took was [illegible] a big smell [illegible] where all the men were lined up watching me. That was a bad jump plum [illegible] the Missouri. I went [illegible] shallow there and the workmen [illegible] come [illegible] after me [illegible] boat I guess I'd have drowned. They hauled me out, took me in and dried me and then took up a collection and [illegible] my pal at the [illegible] the seventy-[illegible] I was broke, having raised [illegible] for necessary to get him across the bridge.

Attempts to Get Work

"We heard [illegible] new packing house [illegible] South Omaha, so we went to [illegible] man who was to be in charge [illegible] asked him for a job. He said the [illegible] nothing doing for a while, but [illegible] around and wait. A hobo always likes to wait, so we waited, and pretty soon found a shack in the big hollow all fitted out with blankets and [illegible] stove which two homesick Swedes from the Northwest country had deserted. We took possession [illegible] looking for food. First thing we came across was a fine ham just cooked [illegible] skinned and put out on the kitchen window sill to cool. My pal was for taking it. But I put up this game. He made as if to grab the ham, I yelled 'thief!' snatched the ham out of his hand, chased him a piece up the alley, and then went back to the kitchen window and handed the ham to the lady of the house, who had come to the kitchen after hearing me yell thief. It turned out just as I thought it would. She questioned me. I told her how we were waiting for the new packing house to open up, and she said to come around whenever I felt hungry and told the girl always to give me something to eat. For nearly two weeks we lived off that woman, then I got ashamed to go back and carry off another meal to my pal.

"We laid around South Omaha waiting until spring. Then we heard of a new line being built by the [illegible] Island in southwest Missouri. We hit for there and one night found the camp in a deep rock cut. We asked for work. The boss said we could have all the work we wanted next day. He showed us the mess tent and we had a good meal—food [illegible] eggs three cents a dozen. But that night my pal, not liking the looks of the place, decided to cut out. He started away as natural as you please when suddenly he brought up against a sen[illegible] took [illegible] the head with a club and told him to get back to camp. You see a lot of hoboes had been asking for work at night and getting filled up [illegible] food and then ducking before day [illegible] around, and the contractor had lost a lot of money.

"That knock on the head [illegible] my pal, but after loafing around a week waiting for the rain to let up so work could begin again I got enough of the camp, especially as I was shaking with ague and fever from drinking the water. So at dead of night I worked my way to a [illegible] the ends were guarded [illegible] sentinels and spent half an hour on [illegible] climbing up the side. I don't know [illegible] I managed to cling to the [illegible] was almost [illegible] but anyway the next morning I was headed alone for the Northwest, where I was told there would be plenty of work with the harvesting season coming on.

In the Hoboes' Heaven

"At Fargo I [illegible] with a German student hobo from the University of Heidelburg. I was still shaking with the ague. He found out what was the matter, begged some powder from a drug store, made me take it, and in a few days I was well. Then he took me round to a brewery where he stood in with the foreman and we swilled all the beer we could drink for a week. At the end of that time we'd drunk too much of the boss's beer, I guess, for one day [illegible] around and gave us [illegible] when the next freight would leave for up the Red River valley [illegible] out of town.

"We went on that train, right before the brakies' eyes. They never throw you off or hold you up when you are going to the harvest fields. They know you haven't a cent or anything else about you worth taking. But when you're on the way back it's different. Then it's a dollar and two dollars a head to the end of the division and more divvy with the brakies of the next division, and so on until the end of the trip or your money gives out, when you are thrown off unless you're strong enough to hold up the crew. But there's a way of getting ahead of the brakies, and I'll tell that in the proper place.

"It was haying time when we sent into a hobo camp near Cummings. Once a day or so a farmer would come to the camp, look over the thirty of us [illegible] say, 'Will [illegible] it's haying time and I'd like [illegible] of you to come along and [illegible]'

"After [illegible] three [illegible] then [illegible] and [illegible] the farmers [illegible] knew [illegible] knew [illegible] needed to harvest the wheat [illegible] few weeks, so they didn't bother us. And we didn't give them any cause to worry about their barns being burned down. Whenever hoboes hit the harvesting country they appoint leaders who make the men turn their pockets inside out at night and won't let them take pipes and matches into the barns.

"Just before [illegible] for the wheat harvest [illegible] the biggest [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] and N[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] great Mr [illegible] dust [illegible] to the camp, which was opposite the church of which he [illegible]

"'W[illegible] you're having a great [illegible] you,' he said.

"'Yes, Mr. Upton,' we said, for we all knew him.

"'Must be making plenty of money, having [illegible]'

"'No, sir, Mr. Upton,' spoke up a hobo, bolder than the rest, 'we ain't [illegible] good money, but the worst of it was there was no way to spend it. The farmers fed us, and there was no saloon around and no way to get whisky. So, when the season was over, all of us had our pockets full of money. I had nearly two hundred and fifty.

Fooling the Brakies.

"Then we began looking about for a way to get east without having to di[illegible] [illegible] made [illegible] with [illegible] [illegible] that the [illegible] [illegible] Red River [illegible] and we stacked [illegible] Pullman.

"We [illegible] when [illegible] Brainard after [illegible] gone two divisions. It [illegible] easy to break the seal from the inside and then [illegible] thirty of us scattered.

"After that it was a case of riding the rods underneath the box cars. The brakies were keeping too sharp a lookout, and when you did sneak into a box car, even if you were with twenty or thirty other hoboes and were strong enough to hang up the crew, at the next station you would be pounced on by a gang of railroaders and beaten black and blue. That is if you wouldn't divvy up all around. I've heard that many brakies have grown rich holding up hoboes on their way back from the harvest fields. Twenty and thirty and fifty dollars a trip, and a trip every other day.

Riding the Rods.

"I rode the rods into Chicago. It was the first time for me, and I hadn't been lying on them and holding on for grim death for a half dozen miles before I wished I'd given all my money to the brakies for a berth in a side door Pullman. The cinders and gravel flew up into my face and cut it till the blood came. My body was pounded till it was bruised all over. My head was pounded against its rest. I ached all over. I could hardly breathe. I was about ready to give up the ghost, I [illegible], when the train stopped and I fell off, and lay alongside the track for a long time. That train went east without me. But I rode the rods of the next [illegible] and pretty soon I was an old hand at the game, which has taken off [illegible] hobo's legs and arms [illegible] he tried to get on the rods [illegible] had too much whisky [illegible] you can't always gauge how fast the train is moving, and [illegible] the [illegible] jump. In a little while my face [illegible] tough that nothing would cut it. [illegible] every time I would leave the [illegible] I took myself for a nigger.

The Veener Hobo State

"Finally, after lot of happenings, I struck eastern Pennsylvania. There I hung up for weeks. It's easy picking in Pennsylvania. The Dutch farmers are soft-hearted, for all they're close, and you can always come a double-header on them, go back for grub the second time and sleep in peace in their [illegible] red barns besides. Taken the year through, Pennsylvania is the [illegible] hobo state, with Ohio second, but you can't come a double header on the Buckeyes.

"Almost a year to a day after I'd left New York I landed back in it. I [illegible] dead broke. The two hundred and fifty was gone. I hadn't spent a cent for grub or lodging, or clothes, or railroad fare with the brakies. A hobo [illegible] money for only one thing. [illegible] whisky. He can [illegible] all the [illegible] necessities. All that two hundred and fifty went for whisky at five [illegible] a slug, just as sure as I'm sitting here. And, my God, how dry I am now!"

Philadelphia: A Big Village

There is only one modern flat-house in Philadelphia, perhaps half a dozen modern hotels and no tenements such as all other cities have by the acre. There is no large proletariat in the city, and such as exists is due to the influx of derelicts from abroad. As a rule the Philadelphian is well employed the year round. There are about three hundred [illegible] resid[illegible] the city [illegible] Great[illegible] New York and [illegible] them [illegible] seven rooms and a bath, generally a sizable back yard, and in the newer portions a little front yard and a porch. SOCIETY

WEDDINGS and preparations for weddings have occupied the attention of society folk this month to the exclusion of any great amount of entertaining. Of course there are plans being made for the summer, as many guests are to be entertained here in the next two months, and they are always the signal for many luncheon parties, dinners and teas. The most important feature of the last week was the formal opening of the Broadmoor Casino, which took place last evening. This most popular resort is always in great demand during the summer and dinners and dances follow each other in rapid succession in the season. Several dances have been given already at the Casino, as the Texas bankers were entertained there Thursday evening and a subscription dance was given Friday evening.

A number of weddings are to take place the coming week and most prominent among these will be that of Clarence Edsall and Miss Cecil Shackelford of Denver. It will be solemnized next Saturday in Denver. On Wednesday Miss Della Shepard and Karl Schuyler will be married at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Shepard, and several other weddings will take place within the week. Certainly June is the month of brides.

The formal opening of the Broadmoor casino and hotel for the summer season took place last evening, ad the popular resort was thronged with many visitors from Colorado Springs and Manitou. In the early hours of the evening there were many dinner parties at the hotel, although they were informal affairs and arranged on the spur of the moment. Tables were set on the broad veranda as well as indoors, many people took advantage of the opening of the casino to dine in the open air. After dinner the Barnes orchestra, which will play at the casino all summer, gave its first concert, and following this the dancing began. Many young people enjoyed the dancing which continued until a late hour. The Broadmoor casino is always a favorite recreation place for Colorado Springs society folk, and this year it is to be under the management of A. W. Bailey, who has been in charge of the hotel and casino for several seasons.

The hotel has been renovated throughout, and the interior of the casino is newly painted and decorated. The buildings are surrounded by beautiful blue grass lawns and blossoming beds of choice flowers, fancifully designed.

The dances and concerts will be continued every evening throughout the season with the exception of Sundays. Sunday afternoons the orchestra will give concerts.

In honor of the delegation of Texas bankers who arrived in Colorado Springs Thursday evening a very delightful dancing party was given at the Broadmoor casino. There were nearly a hundred bankers and the members of their families and they were greeted at the station by representatives of the local banks. They were taken immediately to the casino where more than a hundred Colorado Springs people welcomed them. The Midland band furnished music for the dancing until a late hour and light refreshments were served throughout the evening. The officers of the visiting association who were in the party were Edwin Chamberlain, San Antonio; J. W. Butler, Clifton, secretary; W. H. Rivers, Milford. Among the Colorado Springs people who attended the dance at the Casino were J. A. Hayes, Miss Lucy Hayes, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hemming, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Hemming, Mr. Hemming, Mrs. Alfred H. Engaged—Married

The marriage of Mr. Clarence C. Edsall, of this city, and Miss Cecil Shackelford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joel W. Shackelford, of Denver, will take place in Denver next Saturday. It will be a very quiet wedding, owing to the recent death of the bride's uncle, and only relatives and intimate friends will be present at the ceremony. After a short wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Edsall will make their home in Colorado Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Wight Giddings, of 404 North Tejon street, have issued invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Sarah Adella Giddings, to Dr. Ben Barret Griffith, of Springfield, Ill. The wedding will take place at the home of the bride's parents, at 7:30 o'clock on the evening of Wednesday, June 28. The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. James B. Gregg, pastor of the First Congregational church, in the presence of a few friends, and at 8:30 o'clock a large reception will be held. The wedding will be one of the most important to take place this month, and will be of much interest on account of the social prominence of Miss Giddings. A number of out-of-town guests have already arrived to be present at the ceremony.

Inclosed in the wedding invitation are cards announcing that the couple will be at home after September 11, at 618 South Sixth street, Springfield, Ill. Miss Giddings is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Giddings, and has spent most of her time in Colorado Springs. Dr. Griffith is a physician of Springfield, and a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Nat Wilson, of 205 Cheyenne avenue, in this city.

Wednesday evening at the First Presbyterian church in Pueblo, Miss Jennie Thombs and Mr. Fred R. Abernathey were married by the Rev. J. L. Weaver. The wedding was one of the largest and most fashionable of the season in Pueblo, the church being filled with friends of these popular young people.

The decorations of green, pink and white were profuse, and the large pillars were wound with green interspersed with white carnations. Pink roses and green formed a beautiful background for the whole scene. The wedding party stood before a bank of palms. The bride wore a beautiful white lace gown, and carried white carnations.

The wedding march was played by Mrs. Rethberg and Mrs. J. L. Brookling sang.

Miss Thombs was attended by Mrs. E. W. [illegible] as matron of honor, and Miss Marie Wright as bridesmaid. Dr. R. M. Marshall was best man, and the ushers were Messrs. Lewis Barton, Will D. Gigard, Ross Atkinson and Charles Rice of Denver, a cousin of Miss Thombs.

After the ceremony about fifty of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Abernathey were received at the bride's home on Santa Fe avenue, where a wedding supper was served, the color scheme being pink and white.

Mr. and Mrs. Abernathey left at midnight for a trip west, after which they will make their home in Pueblo, at 824 North Santa Fe avenue.

Miss Thombs is the daughter of Mrs. Lou Thombs and the late Dr. Pembroke R. Thombs and has lived in Pueblo all her life. She is a girl of charming personality, and has a host of friends.

Mr. Abernathey was formerly of Colorado Springs but is now one of the owners of the Chieftain Press, and is very popular and prominent both socially and in business.

Cards have been issued announcing the approaching marriage of Miss Pearl Epperson, of Colorado Springs, and Mr. E. Boyd Kent, of Cripple Creek. The wedding will take place at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Susan H. Lindsay, 622 East Bijou street, Wednesday evening, June 28. The ceremony will be performed at 7 o'clock by the Rev. W. G. Templeton, of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. Following the ceremony a reception will be held from 7:30 to 9 o'clock, after which Mr. Kent and his bride will leave for Glenwood Springs, where they will spend a few weeks before going to their home in Cripple Creek. Miss Epperson is a charming young woman, who for several years has been organist in the Cumberland Presbyterian church.

Invitations were sent out this week by Mrs. Edward Hamilton Reid for the marriage of her sister, Miss Emma Lillian Malden, to Mr. Roy Cotsworth Gowdy. The wedding will take place Tuesday evening, June 27, at 7 o'clock, at the First Congregational church, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. James B. Gregg. The ceremony will be followed by a reception at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Gowdy, on Nob Hill. The couple will be at home to their friends after August 1, at 15 East Caramillo street.

A pretty wedding will take place next Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. William A. Shepard, 105 Cheyenne road, when their daughter, Miss Della Alsena Shepard, and Mr. Karl Cortlandt Schuyler will be united in marriage. It will be a small affair, and immediately after the ceremony the young people will leave on their wedding trip. They will make their home in Colorado Springs. Miss Shepard has just returned from Vassar college, where she was among the graduates this year.

One of the prettiest home weddings of the week was that of Miss Zephyrine Guzman and Mr. Austin H. Seward, formerly of this city, which took place Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Guzman, in Roswell. The [illegible] hall where the ceremony was performed was beautifully decorated in white and green, with a canopy of snowballs under which the bridal party stood. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Manley D. Ormes, the beautiful ring service being used. The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. Leolia Fraser, of Idaho Springs, as matron of honor, who was gowned in white silk muslin and carried pink roses. The bride wore her going-away gown of white embroidered serge, and carried a bouquet of bride's roses, tied with white tulle. Her hat was of white embroidery, trimmed with forget-me-nots. After the ceremony a supper was served in the dining room, where the decorations were of pink carnations. Covers were laid for eighteen. Mr. and Mrs. Seward left in the evening for a short wedding trip, and after July 1 will be at home [illegible]. Among the [illegible] guests were [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] Robbins, Mrs. Leolia Fraser and others.

A [illegible] wedding took place last Monday morning [illegible] Miss [illegible] Elizabeth Watson [illegible] Mr. [illegible] Brewster [illegible]. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a few relatives by the rector, the Rev. Benjamin Brewster, and immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Brewster left on their wedding trip. The bride wore her going-away gown, and the wedding was a most informal little affair. The bride is the attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Watson, and Mr. Brewster is the son of Oliver Brewster, of 914 Cheyenne road. After their wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Brewster will make their home in the east.

Invitations were sent out the past week by Mr. J. B. Casaday for the marriage of his daughter, Miss Jeanne Marie Casaday, to Mr. Joe Clyde Pool, of Denver. The wedding will take place at Grace Episcopal church Wednesday evening, June 28, and the ceremony will be performed by the Rev. Benjamin Brewster at 8 o'clock. Both of the young people are well known here, as Miss Casaday has made her home here for many years. Mr. Pool was formerly connected with the Telegraph, and only moved to Denver about a year ago. The "at home" cards announce that after the 1st of August the couple will reside in Denver.

The marriage of Miss Jessie Merl Tobias, daughter of Mrs. Nora J. Tobias, to Mr. E. James Smith, Jr., will take place next Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock, at the residence of the bride's mother, 106 South Wahsatch avenue. Miss Tobias is well known in Colorado Springs, and the announcement of her approaching marriage will be something of a surprise to her many friends. Mr. Smith is the son of E. J. Smith, of 722 East Kiowa street, and is also well known here.

One of the interesting weddings of the coming week will be that of Miss Grace Anna Robinson and Mr. Calvin Pearl Titus, which will take place Tuesday evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. G. Robinson, 330 East Boulder street. Mr. Titus has just been graduated with honors from West Point academy this week. Mr. Titus will be remembered as the first American soldier to scale the walls of Peking during the siege. He was a member of Company E, Fourteenth Infantry, U. S. A., and was rewarded by being given an appointment to West Point by the late President McKinley.

The marriage ceremony will be performed by an uncle of the groom, the Rev. Mr. Lee, and will be witnessed by a number of friends and relatives of the bridal couple.

Joseph A. Boatwick, of Rocky Ford, and Miss Mabel May Tyler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Tyler, formerly of this city were married last Monday afternoon at the parsonage of the Congregational church in Colorado City by the Rev. F. W. Hullinger. The young people will make their home in Rocky Ford.

Everett Elmer Marshall, for many years connected with the Out West company, and Miss Ida Gertrude Vezey were united in marriage last Wednesday evening at the home of the Rev. W. Charles Wallace, pastor of the United Presbyterian church. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall will make their home at 836 East Cucharas street.

Invitations have been received here for the marriage of Miss Marion Williams and J. D. Clarke, formerly the athletic coach at Colorado college. The wedding will take place next Wednesday at the bride's home in Cheyenne, Wyo., and the couple will leave at once for New York, where they will make their home. Miss Williams is a graduate of Colorado college and it was here that the young people first met.

[illegible] C. Nelson, of Colorado Springs and Miss Clara Robinson of Denver were united in marriage Thursday evening in Denver by the Rev. R. F. Coyle, of the First Presbyterian church. Immediately after the wedding Mr. and Mrs. Nelson left on a two months' trip to the Pacific coast. They will return to this city and will be at home to their friends after August 15. Mr. Nelson is advertising agent for the Colorado Springs & Interurban Railway company, and has hosts of friends in this city who will join in congratulating the couple.

Formal and Informal

Mrs. J. R. Talpey was the hostess at a charming little thimble party yesterday afternoon given in honor of Mrs. Frederick Porter, who is the guest of Mrs. Clarence Hamlin. The affair was quite informal and only a few friends were invited.

Tuesday was observed by Mrs. Clarence C. Hamlin as her regular at home day and during the afternoon there were many callers. Mrs. Hamlin was assisted by her guest, Mrs. Frederick Porter of Leadville, and several delightful musical numbers were given by the hostess and her guests. Among those who contributed to the program were Miss Helen Gauss, Mrs. William O'Brien and Mrs. Porter.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. [illegible] entertained a number of friends at a [illegible] house party [illegible] Saturday [illegible] Half [illegible] the [illegible] day was spent in visiting the different points of interest on burros, fishing and out-door games. At 6 o'clock an elaborate supper was served after which an orchestra furnished music for dancing, which was continued until a late hour. During the evening refreshments were served. A special train was sent up for the party Sunday afternoon, when they returned to their homes. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. David Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Mistler, Mr. and Mrs. E. Baxter, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Lees, the Misses Way, Miller, Mabel and May Palsgrove, Mr. Rulon, Mrs. Merrill and Miss Moor.

All contributions to the Sunday social department should be sent to the editor, Mrs. Adams, 309 East Boulder street, telephone 897-A, or Gazette editorial rooms, telephone 215, not later than Friday.

Invitations have been issued by Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Gowdy for a reception to be given Tuesday evening, June 27, from 8 to 10:30 o'clock at their home on Nob hill. Mr. and Mrs. Roy C. Gowdy, whose wedding takes place early that evening, will be guests of honor.

Miss Mabelle St. John was the hostess at a very delightful party given for the members of the senior class of the High school last Monday evening at her home, 1224 North Tejon street. The house was decorated throughout with the class colors, purple and gold carried out in yards of bunting. Yellow roses were used everywhere and in the hall, where the punch was served, yellow roses and smilax adorned the table and Mrs. Madge Bailey, of Denver, presided. In the dining room streamers of the class colors were hung from the chandelier to the corners of the table. Palms were used in the room. Several guessing contests were held during the evening and prizes were won by Miss Hixie Rider, Erskine Moberly, Prof. Hill and Miss Florence Lattner. Simple refreshments were served late in the evening, carried out in the colors of the High school, brown and white, and of the class. Miss St. John's guests were Mrs. Madge Bailey, Miss Ethel St. John, Mrs. Reinhardt, Prof. and Mrs. Hill, Prof. Schmidt, Miss Merle Wilson, Miss Hixie Rider, Miss Ruth Rogers, Miss Bessie Sperry, Miss Maud Nethers, Miss Mabel Shapcott, Miss May Tyler, Miss Florence Lattner, Miss Marion Sherman, Miss Edna Holmes, Miss Lillian Schuler, Miss Julia Dannevik, Miss Harriet Gilman, Messrs. ALL CHILDREN at birth inherit a predisposition to bodily ills and ailments—more or less serious. The stomach and bowels are the most prolific sources of ill-health. They are the hotbeds of disease, and because less attention is given them, more evil can be traced directly to them than to any other organs of the body.

Where there is the least indication of trouble or you are feeling out of sorts,

Dr. Caldwell's
(Laxative)

should be taken at once.

It is the best preparation for the stomach and bowels.

If they are all out of order it will eradicate the trouble, tone up the parts and restore them to their natural condition. DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEPSIN communicates itself to the whole system and its beneficial and curative effects are pronounced and instantly experienced.

It will keep you in good health.

DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEPSIN can be obtained in both dollar and half-dollar sizes from all druggists.

Your money will be refunded if it does not benefit you.

Your postal card request will bring by return mail our new booklet "DR. CALDWELL'S BOOK OF WONDERS" and free sample to those who have never tried this wonderful remedy. Write for it today.

At a meeting of the El Paso County Horticultural society held at the residence of Dr. H. E. Gates, 214 East Willamette avenue last night, D. W. McLean, General Palmer's head gardener; A. Westland, head gardener at the Printers home, Mrs. F. Walter Barlowe and Mrs. Marion H. Haines were admitted to membership. It was planned to have a series of illustrated lectures given in a tent on the evenings of the flower show. The lectures will deal with the best methods of improving property. The slides for the lectures will be furnished by the American Civic association, of which the local society is a member. Two hundred and fifty new vases for holding small flowers at the show were ordered.

The auxiliary of the Woman's Board of Missions of the First Christian church held an interesting meeting Wednesday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. Beatty, on North Weber street. An address was given by Evangelist Simpson Ely, who is spending his vacation in Colorado Springs. Socially and religiously this was one of the most important meetings of the year for the ladies of the Christian church.

The [illegible] missionary meeting of the Woman's society of the First Presbyterian church was held in the chapel of the church Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. A delightful program was arranged for the afternoon. Mrs. H. H. Seldomridge sang several solos and Miss Elizabeth Slaughter gave a violin solo.

The Woman's Relief corps will meet in regular session at 2:30 o'clock next Tuesday afternoon in the G. A. R. hall.

The members of the board of directors of the Boys' Club association gave the boys an outing in Stratton park yesterday. About fifty of the children were taken to the park on cars furnished by the street railway company, and at noon an elaborate picnic lunch was served. The party returned about 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

THE PERIL OF NORWAY.

an English packet going into Gothenburg, and thirty-six hours later I stood again in King Oscar's cabinet, and placed the treaty in his hands.

I watched the brave monarch read it through from beginning to end without one manifestation of dismay or even of indignation.

"My poor subjects!" was his sole remark as he raised his eyes at the end. "They little know the fate they are preparing for their children."

I asked if his majesty had any further instructions for me. To my surprise he answered, "Yes."

"There is only one quarter to which I can look for aid," he said, "and that is England. Germany is a broken reed. Go to England, take this document with you, show it to the principal members of the government, telling them how it came into your hands, and ask them if they wish to see a Russian Cherbourg within twelve hours of the Scottish coast. If they remain indifferent, I can do nothing more."

"The English press?" I suggested, doubtfully.

"The Norwegians have captured it, I fear," objected his majesty. "Norway is the playground of the British tourist, and, besides, the English consider themselves half Norwegian by race. No popular sentiment in Great Britain is on the side of Norway."

"Nevertheless, sire, if thoughtful Englishmen could be made to realize that, for the sake of pique—for a mere whim—the Norwegians were about to place the keys of the Atlantic in the hands of Britain's most formidable foe, they might make their influence felt."

"Do what you think best, M. V——," the king said, wearily. "I am getting an old man, and I wish for peace."

I have ventured to take his majesty at his word.

THEY MET ON A TRAIN.

Neither Saw the Other's Face, but It Was a Meeting to Be Remembered.

Among the passengers on a train coming in yesterday was a very pretty and graceful and handsomely dressed and refined young woman, immediately back of whom sat a man who, evidently, was a gentleman.

The man read his newspaper for a time and then laying it down, his eye fell presently on the back of the young woman in the seat in front of him, and something that he saw there fixed his attention instantly and caused him to sit up straight and think.

After a while he took off his hat and bent forward and spoke to the young woman, saying something that caused her to turn pink, red, purple, to color, as the story books say, to the very roots of her hair.

The instant he had spoken the man sat back in his seat and turned his face toward the window, out of which he now continued to look persistently. The young woman, after he had spoken, at first sat perfectly still and looked straight ahead, but in a minute or so her hands stole up and around to her back.

The fact was that the back of her dress was unhooked from the top hook down as far as the [illegible]. It was of this fact that the gentleman sitting in the seat back of her and now so persistently looking out of the window, had apprised her.

But try as she would she was now so nervous and wrought up and disturbed [illegible] after long fruitless effort, she gave it up, for the time at least, and sat perfectly still again, facing as before straight to the front.

And then, after a minute, the man again took off his hat, and again bent toward the young woman, and again spoke to her, this time it must have been proffering his aid, which, as clearly, was accepted; for a moment later, he was engaged in bringing the hooks and eyes together, a task which he accomplished with far more deftness and far more quickly than anybody would have expected of a mere man.

And then he sat back in his seat again, and once more looked out of the window, and there he kept his gaze until the train rolled into the station. In the station, with his face toward the rear end of the car, he rose and left the car at that end, while the young woman moved naturally toward the front.

So neither saw the other's face, and yet theirs was a meeting that neither would be likely to forget.—Kansas City Journal.

ACCORDING TO NOSES.

Have you heard of the science of rhinology, otherwise the study of noses? Here are some of the conclusions reached by its devotees:

Thick and fat noses denote material instincts.

Turned-up noses bespeak vanity.

Wide nostrils are a sign of strength.

Small nostrils indicate weakness.

Large noses betoken intelligence.

The eagle nose shows a firm, strong will.

The pointed nose and chin in conjunction proclaim general wickedness.

Certainly the most interesting nose is the cogitative, for it expands with thought, which comes, according to rhinology, or the science of nose-reading, from reflection.

While the ideal of physical beauty remains, as it has always been, the classic Greek nose.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Among Men who Work with Hand or Brain

How Woman Promoter Finds Backers.

By Miss Fox.

[illegible] to admire and applaud and to [illegible] how you do it. [illegible] when cudgelling and begging were the only methods used in "[illegible]." [illegible] brilliant examples show that they [illegible] [illegible] of talking to a favorable impression [illegible] is the entering wedge for the [illegible] the follow-up attack consisting [illegible] of a certain amount of clever argument [illegible] interesting subject, the attitude of mind in which a promoter approaches [illegible] interview, and right here is the time to [illegible] when your methods ever remotely [illegible] approach whining, it is to write failure all over yourself.

Faith in the Idea Essential.

The first and greatest essential is belief in your own idea, not in yourself, but in your idea. No obstacle is so great as that which we create in our minds by doubting the outcome of an undertaking.

It may be a fanciful theory that occasionally the souls of unborn children select their parents, and that such offspring are destined to become great in this world. While this may not be accepted by science it seems true that in the mental world ideas have power to select their progenitors. If, therefore, an idea pursues you so constantly that you can't escape, it may be direct evidence that you are elected to foster it. Where one feels this to be true, he is imbued with so strong a conviction that what he is doing is right that he starts out upon his quest for material help, absolutely unafraid of any obstacle or difficulty being so great that he cannot overcome it.

There is a certain class of people who provide, as regular expense, an appropriation to meet demands of fakes, pure and simple, charity, semi-charity, chronic borrowers, public celebrations, and institutions which require support, such as colleges, churches, galleries, and libraries. The work of investigating is delegated to a secretary or confidential man who looks up the claimant and decides for or against his demand. Theirs is an old story. It is the person with a legitimate scheme who starts out without capital that interests modern female financiers.

How Woman Promoter Works.

"How do you do it," is the question so constantly recurring that I have decided to [illegible] own experience, in which perhaps [illegible] similarly placed may find a practical suggestion.

To guard against self-delusion, it is well to submit your idea to the cold judgment of a practical business man. One of the [illegible] mistakes of women promoters is [illegible] the [illegible] counsel of their hopes and [illegible] and you find the idea still meeting [illegible] whether their objections were prompted [illegible] fear of being called upon to [illegible] point of opposition. [illegible] not always capable of creating ideas [illegible] find means for executing them providing it has courage and endurance, and looks steadily upon the goal and not upon the [illegible].

Certain undertakings always appeal to a certain people, [illegible] Therefore, the first practical step in planning work of this kind is to make a list of people well known for their interest in your particular kind of scheme.

First Appeal to Prominent Person

Of nothing else can it be so truly said that "well begun is half done." Therefore, for your first appeal select the most prominent person in the list as a leader.

To secure the support of independent thinking, wealthy women or men for an undertaking is to more than double the force of argument on the value of your idea. How to secure this first ally perhaps needs explaining. It is neither as easy nor as difficult as one thinks, but it is like opening a door through which you pass into a land of opportunity.

The way to go about securing the first one is to set forth your plan in simple, self-respecting terms. The personality of the one to whom you write will give color to your style. Many wealthy women today have clear heads, clear business judgment, and are not at all susceptible to any appeal which carries a suggestion of maudlin sentimentality exploiting social prominence. People of well known wealth constantly receive appeals of every description. It has been stated with authority that Andrew Carnegie receives each day over 2,000 letters asking for money. To be able to write a letter which will identify it as genuine among so many hundreds of counterfeits is an important requisite for the woman promoter.

Permission to Call a Good Sign.

One may consider permission to call as a good sign. It is at this point that belief in the idea, a reasonable amount of intelligence, and enough tact to know when one is talking [illegible] of the work are all that is necessary. A well thought out section of facts regarding the idea, its purpose and plan, is forcible. Where the enthusiasm of the promoter overrides [illegible], when the ultimate is so clearly outlined in the mind of the speaker, the steps to that ultimate may be leaped over without loss.

Consider that the first person has been interested and a woman or man of prominence secured as a leader. The next step is to find those whose tastes and sympathies are congenial with those of the first person. A certain [illegible] of mind is now necessary, for [illegible] that the same line of approach will lead to interviews with all possible. [illegible] so sensitive as the rich person who has had money long enough for the general public to be aware of the fact. It [illegible] simple axiom that people who have not [illegible] people who have are usually aware of each other's existence, often disagreeably so.

Talk Gets the Money.

The reasons which people give when investing money in an undertaking which is [illegible] quite philanthropy nor business, but which partakes of a little of both, may give a clew to "how does she do it?" Out of twenty people who give money eleven declare that they give it because they like the person asking for it. The personality was agreeable and pleasant, entertaining, and therefore "the talk was worth the money." Six will give money because so and so gave it, which illustrates the truth that the majority of people are fond of a leader. Only two give because they believe in the idea, while all declare that they are willing to help because they believed that the person representing the idea would be able to carry it through.

Therefore first create confidence by having confidence in yourself. This can be done only by knowing that the idea for which you stand has value; second, having tried yourself in various ways and discovered that you have enough grit to carry the thing through, keep constantly in mind that [illegible] plus persistence is all that the human [illegible] is called upon to furnish, that there is a Greater Intelligence which formulates the necessities, providing we "stick" to our sincere declaration that we are willing to [illegible]. All personal traits or mannerisms are merely the expression of the particular belief of the individual.

Material Means Come First.

The material means by which we convince people that our scheme is right and therefore deserving of support are first, the idea; second, the determination on our part to carry it through; third, a list of people whose tastes and means invite the appeal; fourth, the ability to write a well composed letter; [illegible] a well grounded belief in this truth. [illegible] if you can entertain and interest people and discover quickly what appeals to and what affords their taste you have discovered how to make your scheme go.

You Can Earn as Much as You Really Need.

By Jonas Howard.

A MAN properly ambitious, industrious, and willing can make just as much money as his needs require, and seldom can he make any more. If there is the right kind of stuff in a worker, and he is sufficiently aroused by pressing necessity, he can double his salary.

If a worker making only $1,200 a year suddenly faces a condition which tells him that he must increase his income to $2,000 during the next year, he can do it, and without working any harder.

These statements may seem absurd, but they are based on the experiences of [illegible] men who work for their living, and who [illegible] workers with brains enough to [illegible] necessity. They declare that [illegible] have been spurred on by necessity [illegible] when the dire necessity has passed, [illegible] making [illegible] to the low point again.

[illegible] they will double their [illegible].

Small Increases Help Little.

[illegible] perhaps, that the [illegible] he will not "make a kick" [illegible] work hard and diligently, but he [illegible] will go to his employer and demand [illegible]. He [illegible] be rewarded by small [illegible] increases, which renew his hope and [illegible].

[illegible] man working for $25 a week [illegible] advanced to $30. He figures [illegible] that he can save $5 and still live as well as he ever did. But there is where figures do not work out right. At the end of [illegible] he finds that he has not saved any [illegible] did from the $25. It has gone [illegible]. He simply has expanded his [illegible] to fit the larger income.

[illegible] fixed idea of saving [illegible] a week, he can save $200 [illegible] put it in bank. If he were paying [illegible] house or saving to buy furniture, or [illegible] to save enough to go into some [illegible] for himself or to pay off a debt, he [illegible] otherwise not.

When He Makes a Spurt.

[illegible] into this man's life comes [illegible] that calls for a sudden expansion [illegible]. There are two courses either [illegible] and surrender or to throw [illegible] body, and hands, [illegible] he will earn [illegible] and when the pressing demand [illegible] and he makes a [illegible]

Married Men Less Valuable.

[illegible] while single he will [illegible]. These figures [illegible] taken from the records of [illegible] will be [illegible] and away from the office [illegible] work more hours.

[illegible] who get married [illegible]. The reason for this is that [illegible] he will be forced to increase his income [illegible] better position, he gets that increase.

When He Has a Family.

[illegible] married man without children [illegible] coming of children may [illegible] further. The number [illegible] a big town store [illegible] married men in the [illegible] more children draw an average of $1.40 a week more than the [illegible] who have no children.

From these figures it would seem that the [illegible] their expenses increased [illegible] by the arrival of a child, demand and receive better pay.

As a matter of fact it all resolves itself into a question of an increase in energy and "get up." There are few who like to demand even that to which they are entitled. Few like to ask for a raise in salary until some emergency arises that necessitates it. They stand ready to throw increased energy, increased [illegible] into their work, and although circumstances may keep them from their work [illegible] than before, they will [illegible] of the right kind of stuff [illegible] increased salary [illegible] increased [illegible].

Raise the Money When Needed.

[illegible] "Would you have done it [illegible] for a raise?" [illegible] you want to meet it.

It is all simple enough. You can double your income if you are forced to do so.

Where Should a Boy Start? In Big Packing House?

By Jonas Howard.

WHILE it is obviously impossible to take up in these articles separately the different lines of business which the larger scope of opportunity [illegible] the packing house office [illegible]. The development of the [illegible] profession lately [illegible] between [illegible] and [illegible] employed in the [illegible] offices of the large packing houses. When it is remembered [illegible]

Advantages Outnumber Drawbacks

[illegible] In some of the offices the number of employés of all kinds runs close to 1,000, and there is "always room for one more."

No Standing Still Permitted.

In the variety of departments, the number of good positions to be had, the wide awake spirit that prevails and the lack of "dead corners," the packing company excels. Few businesses are so exemplary of the modern strenuosity as this line. There is no slowness, no standing still and treading water. There is progress always, for there is not a packing company of any consequence in the country that is not expanding its [illegible] every year and this expansion means the creation of [illegible] new positions [illegible] employé is kept aware [illegible] only a question of showing ability [illegible] of the [illegible] as to whether he will get a chance.

If he has the ability and shows it he will get his chance. [illegible] the motto of the packing company. The young man who can help along [illegible] packing [illegible] the kind who finds [illegible]. But he must show this, and in no ordinary degree, if he is to gain promotion.

Year Test Generally Decisive.

[illegible] begins at [illegible] a year. [illegible] Two dollars more [illegible] the highest [illegible] he may hope to get as a mere clerk, and to get more he must show that he has [illegible] the smallest [illegible]. If he has he will be given [illegible] start. There are more positions of this [illegible] in the business world, and [illegible] between $30 and $50 a week [illegible] the packing [illegible] being a good worker. Also it will quickly [illegible].

Work Hard but Opportunities Good.

[illegible] Practically every [illegible] house manager [illegible]. The pay in these positions compares favorably with that of the general officers of a railroad. It is emphatically a well paying line.

But the impression must not be taken that the young man who fails to find a good [illegible] the packing industry [illegible] large offices also have their quota [illegible] who have fallen [illegible] never get out. The young man who enters the employ of a packing company must be prepared to work hard, and [illegible] than he would in other offices. [illegible] proportionately greater.

Woo Success, Then Your Sweetheart.

By John [illegible]llington.

[illegible] the modern sweetheart [illegible] of the [illegible] sweetheart.

When a man has his life's work to be done, women except his mother, and perhaps his sister, must be thrust back.

When some one declared that all the world loved the lover it did not include the [illegible] business world. [illegible] takes advantage of his dreams and [illegible] a fine deal from him. His frugality disappears. Economy is flung aside. His salary goes for theater tickets, dinners, and the world of things that can be bought for a woman. And when the time for the favorable proposal of marriage is at hand, like as not she will take into account the young lover's extravagance which will inculcate a fear that he would not be a "good provider," and give her hand to some fellow who has been too busy making a name for himself to pay much attention to her.

Money Does Not Win Love.

Women are won not by being made the object of extravagant attention by a man. They are won by a glance sometimes, by a word, by a deed, or by the combination of the three, or by the number of different ways as there are women. But the woman you want [illegible] not won by the lavish expenditure of money.

The young man of today must strive to [illegible]. And every working hour spent [illegible] whether [illegible]

[illegible] one of the classes that graduated from a large western educational [illegible] there were two men who took a [illegible] always [illegible] were engaged [illegible]. A boy who had sworn out some distance took a cramp and was about to drown. The man began to take off his garments. The sweetheart ordered him to stop and declared that if he disrobed further she would have nothing to do with him. The man [illegible] that if he were handicapped with [illegible] he could do nothing in the water. He promptly told her to do as she liked, finished his disrobing act, plunged in, and, after a fearful struggle, which left him completely exhausted, he succeeded in saving the boy's life. Had he worn his clothes both would have been drowned. The engagement was terminated at once. He wanted no woman like that for his wife.

Love Dreaming Causes Failures.

On a western newspaper was a youth who had shown great promise as a sporting editor. He had been given a place that carried responsibility. He did his work well. But he fell in love. In his [illegible] he wrote [illegible]. From that day he began [illegible]. He [illegible]. He became the [illegible] laughing stock of his fellows. His comfort [illegible] was basking in smiles [illegible]. She urged him to win [illegible]. He wrote her [illegible] letters [illegible]. A man who had succeeded [illegible]. This man had had no time for women. He had been busy winning victories, making achievements. He pressed his suit and won.

No Time for Mere Lovers.

The world has no time for mere lovers. It wants men who are [illegible] is the idleness [illegible] and the business of the life. When a youth forgets and takes his eyes from the goal to become merely a man in love, penning [illegible] poems to his mistress' eyebrows, soon you will behold him among the idlers and among the failures.

Furthermore, women do not want [illegible]. They want men first, and when a man has proved his right to the title by laying aside all thought of pleasure in woman's smiles, casting from him all issues except those that bear upon his success, then women—the right sort—will be ready to be won. But not until the youth of today has planted himself moderately well up on the ladder, and holds a firm grasp on the actualities of life and its problems, has worked [illegible] a few of the answers to its more important questions and shown folks [illegible] the highway to success [illegible] that he has mapped [illegible]

J. D. Rockefeller, Jr., Gives His Views on "Tainted" Money and the Conduct of Business Affairs

Following are some recent utterances of John D. Rockefeller Jr. mostly to his Bible class in the Fifth Avenue Baptist church embodying the young multimillionaire's views on tainted conduct in business affairs and on the relation between Christianity and commercial conduct

Absolute Honesty the First Requisite

Many men of today think that dishonesty is the best policy and that business and Christianity are diametrically opposed to each other.

"There are three chief requisites for a successful business man. The first is honesty—absolute honesty.

A Corporation Which Does Not Help Others Will Fail in the End

The man or the corporation who has not determined at the outset to do good to others while doing good to himself will fail in the end.

A True Christian Should Give Up a Bad Business

I believe myself that a man can be a good Christian and a successful business man.

If he finds that his business is following interferes with his Christian duties or disturbs his beliefs he should give the business up.

A Hypocrite Does Untold Injury

The man who talks one thing on Sunday and lives another on week days does untold injury.

Keeping Just Within the Law Not Enough

To be really a Christian you must observe the spirit as well as the letter of the law. The question is, Are you truly following the teachings of Jesus Christ? He laid them down teachings that emanate from within and that while they hold you to the law demand something far deeper than the observance of any canon.

A Man Must Stand By His Convictions

I think nothing can be more helpful to us than to stand by our convictions. Let us have the spirit and determination to do that which is right and we shall be made stronger.

A Man Must Have High Moral Principle

The kind of men the world needs most today is: First, men of integrity and high moral principle.

Conscience Must Be Followed

We may deceive the public, we may deceive the men we meet day by day, but we cannot deceive ourselves or our God.

"We who live in this enlightened age of this world have every opportunity to know what is right and wrong and it seems to me have little excuse for not having proper standards, and therefore the dictates of our conscience ought to be correct.

Will Do What He Believes To Be Right

I believe in every one listening to his conscience and obeying it. I try to do what I believe is right.

A Man Must Have Character

"The man who wins earthly victories without taking care of his character, I imagine will not feel very much like a success on his death bed. —New York World

WHERE RIBBONS MAKE THE STYLE....

A DECOLLETAGE GARNITURE

A SIMPLE RIBBON RUCHE

Certain it is, judging from all indications, that this summer time—the summer of this year of grace 1905—will go down to history as the ribbon summer. Never before has there been such a perfect craze for ribbons. Ribbons broad and ribbons narrow, ribbons sheer and gauzy and ribbons rich and sumptuous in weave and texture. Silk ribbons, gauze ribbons, velvet ribbons, and even chiffon ribbons are all on the counters, piled up in masses of coloring that must inevitably delight the heart of everyone with any artistic perception and appreciation of color and color values.

And such a field for originality and individuality as they present. The fashion wise have long ago awakened to their possibilities, with the result that those smart and exclusive shops that cater to the small vanities of dress really look more like ribbon emporiums than anything else.

The printed Dresden ribbons are among the leaders in this charming fashion procession. In the broad sash widths, anywhere from a half a yard to a full yard and a quarter in width—although it must be confessed that this latter width is rare in this country, while France makes much use of it—there is simply no part, no design in dress that cannot be fashioned with these charming weaves.

The gown that is altogether of ribbons and the gown that is partly of these fascinating fabrics divide favor with the summer girl. All of the sheer and filmy materials—the chiffons, mousselines, gauzes and such—are trimmed with ribbons in all sorts of schemes and styles, and their application is limited only by the ingenuity of the designer.

Both the surplice and the bolero mode are deftly and exquisitely developed with the aid of these broad sash ribbons, and as for the ceintures and the girdles, the bretelles and braces, the flounces and ruches, that are and can be fashioned from all sorts of ribbons—well, their name is legion, and to recount them were a vain and infinite task.

The flowers that are fashioned from those fascinating strands are far and away the most modish trimming that the summer chapeau can boast. So deftly are they fashioned, and so daintily are the natural colorings and shadings carried out, that they have almost entirely displaced the usual muslin or silk flower of artificial origin.

Roses and rosebuds, poppies, forget-me-nots, chrysanthemums, violets and daisies are some of the most successful. And the maker of the ribbon flowers does not disdain to borrow from the stock of the artificial flowermaker and make telling use of foliage, stems and calyx where, with to make her own production the more realistic. The large shepherdess shapes are particularly for being trimmed after this mode, and when a bandeau is introduced at the left side and a further knot of the [illegible] flowers perched [illegible] a very dashing air is imparted [illegible] style.

The ribbon [illegible] has everything its own way, not only for dresses and [illegible] but for all the accessories and needs that the [illegible]. The chiffon [illegible] are delightful in [illegible] straight flounces, festoons, vandyke points, circles and the Greek key pattern are some of the ways that clever fingers dispose of the ribbons, wide or narrow, according to the designs, on these fluffy sunshades. And the long shaft handles that are the very newest thing for this season, they take to trimming as the proverbial duck does to water. Indeed, the length of the handle simply cries aloud for some such touch of elaboration, and what so chic and at the same time so easily attained as a fluffy ribbon chou with a "shower" of small and narrower ribbons dangling from it, fastened some half way down the long plain shaft.

But it is in their appearance as a garniture for the evening gown that they will appeal mostly to the smart and clever dresser of this summertime. Given a goodly supply of sashes and belts and stockpieces to match, their fashioning makes delightful piazza work and the required featherbone stays are easily adjusted. It is but a very short time [illegible] until even the veriest tyro [illegible] readily can [illegible] and make for herself those charming fe[illegible] and sprays that the shops charge [illegible]

[illegible] these are cut quite low for the summer time, and some sort of a smart finish is essential to their best success. Then the pretty spray for the hair is made to match, this to be adjusted after the hair has deftly been pinned in place. Tiny [illegible] little rhinestone dewdrops and mock jewels add greatly to this dainty effect on the evening gown, and flowers, buds and foliage are all so [illegible].

The Half-Sleeve Rules the Summer Fashions

Even the Parisian Tailors are Finishing their Most Severe Productions with the Abbreviated Arm Covering.

There is nothing that dates a frock or a wrap more accurately than does the size, the shape and the style of the sleeves.

Bodices [illegible] remain more or less staple for more than one season at any rate, and frequently for even three or four, but the sleeve is the [illegible] that indicates every changing [illegible] every passing whim of the fickle [illegible] that rules the fashions.

The half-sleeve that may [illegible] taken possession of the field in no uncertain manner. All sorts and descriptions of garments boast of this style, one that can be so daintily developed that one wonders that it has not been recognized and exploited before, or again it may be so fashioned that its brevity is attributable to a scantiness of material rather than to a recognition and following of a set style.

Even the tailor-mades that are supposed to represent the plainest and the severest mode that the tailor can turn out, those productions that despise lace ruffles and all the frills, fixings and furbelows that the Parisian demi-tailleur mode make such telling use of, even this plain and severe style has been forced to accept the charms of the abbreviated sleeve and fall in line accordingly.

[illegible] that this summer time an abundantly bounteous in the half sleeve. No scantiness or skimpiness of material must exhibit itself here, but rather must the art that conceals art be brought into play, and what is really an undue allowance of stuff at this point rather be so [illegible] manipulated that its bulk is not recognized nor suspected.

One, two and sometimes even three puffs are posed above the elbow. Tucks, shirrings, smockings are relied upon to adjust the matter of the fullness between the puffs, and instances are not lacking where smart little strappings of ribbon are introduced, these seeming to tie the material into the required small line between puffs. Velvet ribbons are extremely modish in this connection, and [illegible] little square bows are centered with [illegible] buckles or with old fashioned [illegible] that produce a delightful [illegible].

A [illegible] and generous use is made of puffs upon those new sleeves that are developments of the later modes. They may appear almost anywhere upon the sleeve from wrist to elbow, and even above it. They may flare upward or downward, be fashioned from a plain and straight band, they may take on wide cavalier outlines or cling loosely to the arm in mitaine shape, but whatever their size, their shape, their conformation, they simply must be trimmed, and rather lavishly at that.

Despite the rumors of huge sleeves that prevailed earlier in the season, those that are arriving almost daily from the great houses on the other side exhibit a commendable modesty as to outline. While it is true that most of them require some little support for the fulness at or just below the curve of the shoulder, the extreme of size that prevailed some 10 years ago is not to be thought of in connection with present styles.

Ruffles of silk, scant volants of a featherweight haircloth or sprung straps of featherboned crinolette are used on the sleeve lining to give a slightly "puffed" air to the puffed material, but even this slight assistance must be managed discreetly, else the silhouette of the figure will be "out of drawing" with the current adaptations of the mode.

The French [illegible] usually takes the size and the build of his customer into consideration when selecting the sleeve. Hence one does not see a short, plump little woman weighted down with a two yard puff to her sleeve, while her taller and more slender sister displays a skin-tight sleeve and [illegible] fitting garment. Either the [illegible] or the customer, the one or the other, or perhaps both, is gifted with some sense of proportion, and the result is the avoidance of ridiculous extremes.

The [illegible] some slight increase of fulness at the shoulder; but this is not gotten rid of by the time the elbow is reached, and from there to the wrist [illegible].

The gown [illegible] sleeve is one that is far better suited to heavier fabrics, and this is expected to run the full length of the arm. The design is one that will not permit cutting off half way down; and when this is attempted there is always sure to be rather more than a hint of lack of material as well as lack of taste.

The quaint little undersleeves, invariably of transparent make and material, are very welcome to the girl whose lower arm is not up to the requirements of classical beauty; and the fact that they are extremely modish is merely another, if not a better, cause for their adoption.

Fashions in Girdles.

The newest things in girdles have taken to themselves an upward trend that will render them extremely trying, if not, indeed, impossible for any but the most perfectly proportioned figures. And considering that the perfect woman is the exception rather than the rule in these latter days, the girl who would follow this mode must take due heed to the lines and outlines of her figure ere she embark in the wake of this style.

The tall and slender girl can have those delightful corselet effects built upon these [illegible] and featherboned girdle frames, and even her plumper sister can adopt them with good results provided the [illegible] the girdle [illegible] design.

The really plump sisterhood, if they must follow the fashion that commends the ceinture, would better have theirs fashioned upon the bodice, and arrange the lines so that the deepest part comes under the arms. Here a most becoming slope is attained to the center, back and front, this [illegible] making for an appearance of length and slenderness that is flattering in the extreme.

The Many and Varied Uses of Ribbon on the New Frocks.

THE ROSE MAIDEN.

In this charming picture the hat, the coiffure dressing, the decolletage trimming are all of ribbons deftly manipulated into flower shapes. The hat is one of those simple shepherdess shapes in a satin straw braid of a burnt tint, the one that matches the pongee silks somewhat in coloring. The roses are all fashioned of a pink satin ribbon, the tints being chosen and worked in to follow the natural shadings. The artificial-flower maker's stock is called upon to furnish foliage, stems and calyx, this lending an air of verisimilitude to the finished work. The wreath of roses encircles the crown of the hat, a bunch of buds is perched upon the bandeau, and a similar knot, with sprays of velvet maidenhair, is tucked in at the side of the low coiffure after the hair net has been deftly adjusted.

The spray that surrounds the decolletage is of small moss rosebuds, all of ribbon, with the foliage and maidenhair fern lending an air of lightness and grace to the entire design, one that cannot fail to be bewitchingly becoming to a youthful wearer.

WHERE RIBBONS MAKE THE STYLE.

This charmingly simple frock of white point d'esprit owes all of its chic and grace to the clever distribution of the trimming scheme, for which ribbons are relied upon entirely. The bodice is fashioned after the bebe mode, the ribbon ruffles on waist and sleeve following a seemingly unbroken line, and a Frenchy little effect is gained in the star-shaped rosettes of the same ribbon that are applied between the grouped ruffles. The sleeve is a puffy affair, that ends in an elaborate but seemingly simple cuff at the elbow. The bodice is constructed upon a carefully boned and fitted lining, and the girdle is mounted directly upon this bodice lining, so that the curves of the figure are followed exactly. The skirt is very simple, being in three flounce sections, the one shirred to the other, and a double row of ribbon [illegible] applied to conceal the joining. The use of a wired velvet ribbon at the foot not only makes the skirt hang in a little flare, but likewise adds muchly to its chic and style.

WITH SASH AND VELVET RIBBONS.

A remarkably smart toilette is constructed from apparently incompatible materials. A broad sash ribbon, white with Dresden flowered printing in pale yellow, two shades of rose pink and some faint green in the foliage to offer some relief, is combined with white embroidered mousseline de soie, a narrow ribbon in pale yellow, and some very clever touches of black velvet expressed in the pointed strap girdle, and a multitude of small gold buttons that dot the trimming design all over. The bodice follows bolero lines, tabs of the sash ribbon, edged throughout with velvet, and the under blouse is of the mousseline. The sleeves are similar in make, the ribbon making a scant puff over a band of lace edged with the narrow ribbon and dotted with buttons. The skirt is fashioned of the mousseline, panel effects made with lace insertion edged with quilled ribbon, and dotted on either side with an irregular row of buttons. The broad printed ribbon is applied in flounce design, ruffled top and bottom with the narrow edging and lace entredeux, and finished with quilled frills [illegible] at the foot.

THAT SMART FINISHING TOUCH.

There are any number of smart hats in the shops that are sold under the title of "ready to wear," but which almost invariably need just some finishing touch, some little addition, to give them that chic and distinction that belongs to the creation of the artistic milliner. The ribbon counter will usually furnish the inspiration for this, and the fact that at all of the leading shops rosettes, bows and other trimming motifs in ribbon can be made up to order without cost is an additional inducement to their use. The hat of the picture is one of those round sailor shapes with a slightly rolling brim, the top covered with a rather coarse maline net ruffled scantily with a No. 2 white moire ribbon, and the under brim simply covered with a loosely tacked scarf of a finer maline. The wire frame is pinched up at the left side and a fluffy rosette of pale blue satin ribbon tucked in, the streamers that hang at the back giving a delightful air of originality to a hat that would otherwise lack this distinction.

A SIMPLE RIBBON RUCHE.

A ribbon ruching in a peculiar shade of Sevres blue is made to afford a very clever touch of color contrast upon this smart turban shape in a medium shade of Nile green, a touch which the close bunches of forget-me-nots in velvet and a stray tea-rose bud in yellow intensifies to a delightful degree. The hat itself is really one of those large brim shapes, deftly wired to a most original turban. The ribbon ruche, box pleated throughout, is made to serve as a trimming for the crown, and appears to hold the folds of the brim in position. On the outer side of the brim, however, the greater part of the trimming is massed, and little bows with floating ends are used to punctuate the trimming scheme at intervals with charming results.

A DECOLLETAGE GARNITURE.

The vogue of ribbon garnitures for the evening gown is a charming conceit, and there is simply no end to the clever designs that are exploited in these. In the [illegible] a clever use is made of narrow satin and velvet ribbons, with knots and ends of a broad satin ribbon at intervals to give [illegible] dash and character to the smaller design. Three shades of turquoise are used for the decolletage decoration, and the long pendant ends that are daintily knotted are all of the lighter tone. The coiffure ornament is likewise in the faintest tint of blue, and the center is that usually used for a poppy flower, in a dull sage green that harmonizes well with the turquoise shadings.

The Chapels of the Tongues

Services in Many Languages Will Be Conducted in New York's Great Cathedral—A Plan Without Precedent for Reaching the Foreign Speaking Peoples of the American Babel.

NEW YORK, June 13.—Every [illegible] language and not a few [illegible] and even savage dialects are spoken in New York['s] great babel which has a foreign-born [population] amounting to nearly one-third of its total population where persons of forty-three different nationalities are found in sufficient numbers to require representation by consuls. You may pass through whole streets and neighborhoods on the east side without once hearing the sound of an English sentence and anybody who listens to the confusion of tongues prevailing along the Bowery on a Saturday night is given to wonder whether or not Manhattan can rightly be called American at all.

So thoroughly has this diversity of language and the obstacles which it presents to the ministrations of the English-speaking clergy been recognized that the trustees of the Cathedral of St John the Divine conceived, some time ago, a plan entirely without precedent in ecclesiastical annals for extending to foreign-born people opportunities for worship in the tongues they best understood. It was to make of the chapels in the cathedral building now in process of erection on Morningside heights national sanctuaries where alien Christians might attend services conducted in their native speech.

These chapels are intended to be symbolical of the chief races from which the American people have been welded, and a committee consisting of Bishop Potter, Rev. Dr. Huntington and Rev. Dr. Cady was appointed to give them their official designations. One of them has already been built and is popularly known as the "Belmont Chapel" from the fact that $100,000 was given for its erection by the banker, August Belmont, in memory of his mother. Such a gift for such a purpose is of peculiar interest as coming from a man who might be thought to be absorbed in his immense business interests since he is the American representative of the Rothschilds and a controlling owner in the rapid transit companies to say nothing of many other great corporations. M[illegible] view of the objects to which the chapels are destined there is a singular appropriateness in Mr Belmont's having been the first to contribute the means of building one, inasmuch as his father, the first August Belmont, was himself of foreign birth.

Another chapel will be built during the coming summer for which Mrs Edward King of New York and Newport has given $100,000 in memory of her daughter M[illegible] King. It will be the [illegible] on the north side of the [illegible] called the Scots Chapel [illegible] ded[ica]ted [to] the name of St [Columba].

The seven Chapels of [illegible] which are to include these [illegible] rial buildings are [illegible] among the distinctive features [illegible] cathedral. Surrounding [illegible] semicircle, and each being in itself a little [illegible] capable of holding about a hundred [illegible] they will be separated [from] the rest of the edifice by the ambulatory [illegible] the [illegible] which was laid [illegible] which the seven chapels [illegible] The committee said in making its report that the phrase "Chapels of the Tongues" which has come to be popularly associated with [these] projected buildings indicates an [original] intention to connect them in some way with the various racial elements that have entered into the structure of [our] national and more especially [illegible] population. The three [illegible] of the northern side of the [illegible] represent the three great [illegible] Northern Europe Anglo-Saxons, Scandinavians and Teutons. These [illegible] to be designated the chapel of the Scandinavian Rite, called the Swedes chapel and dedicated in the name of St Ansgarius, the chapel of the German Rite, to be known as the Holland chapel dedicated in the name of St Boniface and third the chapel of the British rite to be called the Scots chapel and dedicated in the name of St. Columba. It is this last for which Mrs Edward King has given $100,000 [and] which is to be erected this summer. [illegible] on the name for it the committee found themselves face to face with a rather delicate problem.

Comparatively few of our Irish fellow citizens it says in its report [illegible] [illegible] there spread the gospel through Ireland as well as North Britain. Both Catholics and Protestants recognize in St Columba [one] of the great heroes of the early ages of Christianity and of the Irish [church].

The three chapels on the south side [in] like manner represent the three [chief] races of southern Europe Spaniards, Italians and French. They will be the chapel of the Italian Rite called the Italian Chapel and dedicated in the name of St Ambrose, the chapel of [the] Gallican Rite to be called the Huguenot Chapel and dedicated in the name of St Martin of Tours and the chapel of the Mozarabic Rite, to be called the Spanish Chapel and dedicated in the name of St James. In these chapels services will be conducted in the vernacular of the three great Latin nations and based on national liturgies long ante-rating the period of the Reformation. The committee believes that with episcop[al] [illegible] these ancient forms of worship can properly be used in a great Protestant cathedral, which is to be far more than Anglican in its scope, and that beneficent results will follow their inclusion.

To many Americans not familiar with [illegible] problems of immigration [it] will seem strange that there should be [a] demand for Protestant [illegible] parish [illegible] [illegible] of the immigrants [illegible] Scotch-Irish ate therefore [illegible] Protestant bodies with [illegible] Many of [illegible] Welsh and [illegible] Episcopal [illegible] of its work among the foreign population of the city in the Italian quarters and even among the Jews of the east side. The Chapels of the Tongues are not designed to interfere with the work of other churches but to be a means of securing the attendance of that very large class of immigrants who have no religious affiliations. It is probable that the canons missioners who are to form part of the cathedral staff will be chosen largely for their familiarity with the different languages and will conduct the services in these chapels.

The central chapel of the seven now known as the Belmont Chapel the committee decided to designate the Chapel of the Oriental Rite, to dedicate it to the Holy Name, and to call it in common use St Saviour's Chapel. In reaching this decision the committee was largely influenced by the obvious propriety of connecting the easternmost chapel looking toward the dawn directly with the name of "Our Blessed Lord the Light of the World." An interesting ecclesiastical question was also raised in connection with the naming and dedication of this chapel. With the rise of mariolatry—as theologians call the worship of the Virgin Mary—in the Middle Ages came the custom of adding to the eastern end of all large churches a "Lady Chapel." This custom became so universal that a cathedral without such a chapel is not now regarded as ecclesiastically complete and one costing $80,000 is in course of erection at St Patrick's Roman Catholic cathedral in this city. It was not thought, however, that the title "Lady Chapel" was appropriate for any portion of a Protestant cathedral built after the Reformation, though in those churches which have passed from the Catholics into the hands of the Anglicans it has not been thought necessary to make any change in the time-honored name.

Important as the trustees believe the work of these seven Chapels of the Tongues will be, they have decided not to devote to their construction any of the general building funds of the cathedral but to leave them to be erected by separate donations for which their individuality makes them particularly appropriate. How long under this scheme it will be before the remaining five are constructed, no one of course can guess. In the interval, the choir proper is being completed and as soon as the $125,000 still lacking of the $1,000,000 which it has been estimated is required to finish the choir and crossing of the transepts can be raised this part of the great cathedral will be made ready for services. The entrance from the ambulatory to the five chapels still unprovided for will be bricked up until such time as someone comes forward with the necessary funds for others of the chapels. As one member of the building committee said "It may take a long time, but we do not expect to do this thing in one year or in ten."

College Girls Have First Real Club House for Women

New Building for Radcliffe Students Opened Last Evening—Initial Production of the Literary Drama, "Marlowe," to Signalize the Occasion —A Tribute to Mrs. Elizabeth Cary Agassiz's Work.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., June 17, 1905.

There was opened for inspection for the first time last evening, at Radcliffe college a building typical of the diversified interests of the twentieth-century college girl. Indeed [illegible] it is probably the finest student clubhouse in the world. Built and equipped at an expense above $100,000 Agassiz House as it is called is as perfectly appointed as the most exacting man would wish his favorite club to be though its scope is quite different from that of the ordinary social organization.

Agassiz House was erected as a token of appreciation of the distinguished work of Mrs Elizabeth Cary Agassiz for many years the leader in the movement which from small beginnings developed the present Radcliffe and president of the college until a few years ago when she retired from active work to the honorary position she still holds. The fund for building and equipping this unique student house was contributed in part by Mrs Agassiz's family—Professor Alexander Agassiz, the distinguished American scientist, is her son, the [illegible] more distinguished scientist Professor Louis Agassiz was her husband and Mrs Henry L. Higginson and Mrs Quincy A. Shaw are her daughters—a [illegible] [illegible] and for[mer] [illegible] other friends [illegible] abroad.

The new building is intended to meet [illegible] women [illegible] college [illegible] and many [illegible] far enough from the [illegible] halls so that they need a place in the college grounds where they may pass their leisure hours between lectures, either in study, rest or recreation, may leave their wraps and eat luncheon. Perhaps there is nowhere else so near an approach to a real woman's clubhouse—that is to say, a clubhouse for women like the typical social club for men.

The only restriction of membership so to speak, is that a girl must be a Radcliffe student to be admitted to these privileges. Everything in the building is freely to be used by every Radcliffe girl. Indeed the main purpose of the house is to afford a common meeting place for students and for graduates when they return to Cambridge in later years—a purpose to be appropriately realized for the first time this year, when members of past classes return to their alma mater for the commencement that marks the completion of its first quarter century. The need it meets in student life was first pointed out by Miss Agnes Irwin dean of the college, in her annual report some eight years ago.

[illegible] the architect Mr A. W. Longfellow, Jr. a nephew [of] the poet who was long [illegible] with Professor Louis Agassiz at Harvard [illegible] [illegible] of Harvard [illegible] the rooms [illegible] portions. There is a [illegible] room which Miss Alice Longfellow has appropriately called the [illegible] book shelves and reading tables. There is a lunch room, where 150 students can be served at one time, and below are the kitchens and cold storage equipment. There are a dozen smaller rooms that will be used for study as well as recreation, meeting quarters for the score of clubs that share the students' interests at Radcliffe, rest-rooms in which a girl may find absolute quiet or even be isolated in case of illness, should she prefer living here to remaining in a lodging house, a locker room for 500 girls and back of all an auditorium with 450 seats. Its stage equipped as perfectly as would be needed in a professional theater and constructed so that it may produce the effect of an academic stage as well as one for theatricals.

Throughout the house the rooms are arranged in suites so that a number of small meetings may be held simultaneously or two or three apartments may be thrown together if desirable for a larger gathering. Furthermore the building is connected by a colonnade with the gymnasium which stands next to it in the college yard and on such occasions as class day the main floors of both buildings can be thrown open for dancing, so as to form practically a single great ball room.

The opening of Agassiz House will be signalized most appropriately in view of the activities of the modern college girl, by the performance in the auditorium Monday and Tuesday evenings of "Marlowe," the literary drama by Miss Josephine Preston Peabody, a Radcliffe graduate of ten years ago. "Marlowe" has been adjudged by competent critics of dramatic literature to be the finest example of blank verse drama written in America in many years. Indeed were it not for the work of George H. Boker the dramatist of 50 years ago Miss Peabody might almost be credited with founding a new school in this country. Besides that "Marlowe" is what is known to managers as an acting play, that expresses [illegible] [illegible] actors and actresses. In fact [illegible] well-known managers will be in the audience when the play is presented by the company of Radcliffe girls and students who give it its initial production.

In "Marlowe" appear most interestingly and strikingly the results of present day collegiate education for women which has developed at this institution to take a single example [illegible] playwright [illegible] portant work [illegible] of Ameri[ca] [illegible] has been [illegible] Miss P[eabody] [illegible] [illegible] thought as well as the [illegible] comedies.

The Story of the Bisque Doll

BY WILLIAM WALLACE JR

I'm a bisque doll, and am about six months old though, having lived through a recent leaf of [illegible] life, I fancy I look much older than this. My life up till a few days ago seemed pleasant enough (and is pleasant enough now, for that matter), but one, especially a doll, never knows from one day to the next what may turn up.

I came to live in my present home on a day called Christmas. Everything was stir and bustle, excitement [illegible] then. Later things became more settled, and I found out that I was intended to be the friend and playmate of Hattie Turner. There's another Turner girl, Ethel, who is sweet sixteen. The way I came to know her age was through her young beau, Mr. Bob Travis, who brought a college chum of his to meet Ethel the other day. While they were waiting in the parlor for Ethel to come down Mr. Bob took a little picture of Ethel out of his pocket and showed it to his friend. "Oh! she's a downright pretty," his friend said. "How old is she?"

"Sweet sixteen," Bob told him. That is the way I know her age.

Just as Bob told this in ran Hattie to get me from the sofa, where she had thrown me an hour before in a terrible muss. Really, I was in a most pitiful condition, with my skirt torn, my [illegible] dirty, my hair disheveled and one slipper gone. I felt dreadfully humiliated over being seen in such a plight, but the fault was not mine. Now to tell you how I come to be so untidy and in the parlor, I shall be obliged to introduce two animals (Turner pets) into the story. One, a most idle, shiftless, light-brained fellow, a good-for-nothing puppy by the name of Abraham Bismark, and the other a fire-spitting, vicious-tempered old tabby cat, by the name of Tabetha Teasie, are the individuals guilty of the misdemeanor which brought me to grief.

I had been beautifully dressed in a new pink frock, my feet shod in my party slippers and a big bow of pink ribbon tying my curls, which were in the latest approved fashion, and was put in my wicker go-cart to be taken for a morning stroll by my companion, Hattie Turner. Just as we were about to start Ethel called to Hattie to run to a neighbor's on an errand. Hattie left me in my cart on the side porch, promising to return for me as soon as she had performed her errand.

As I sat there enjoying the bright summer morning air and feeling conscious that all the little girls who passed on the sidewalk looked upon me with admiration, there came round the corner of the porch old Tabetha Teasie, the pesky old cat! Now she had formed the habit of getting into my go-cart and sleeping whenever she had the opportunity, but she had had the good manners to wait till I vacated it. On this morning, though, contrary to custom, she sprang right up into my cart without even so much as a "with your permission, Miss Myrtle," and proceeded to lie down on me. She is such a huge creature that she almost smothered me, and she crumpled my pretty frock so that I felt I should cry of vexation. And there she lay, blinking in the sun and purring for all the world like an old lady snoring. Just as I was wishing from the depths of my kid-covered heart that Hattie would come to my rescue, here through the gate came that horrid puppy, Abraham Bismark, making a bee line for the porch. Seeing Tabetha, who was his natural enemy, he sprang toward her and barked, pretending to be on the warpath. It is very true, though, he was only pretending, for he hadn't enough courage to engage in a real fight.

Old Tabetha rose up of a sudden, her tail slowly switching and her back curving, while her sharp claws buried themselves in my body. Again sprang Abraham toward her, bow-wowing terribly and plunging his paws into the go-cart. One quick lift from Tabetha's paw took him unawares between the eyes, and with his feet caught in the wicker work of the cart he fell backwards, barking and snapping with fear and anger. Over went the cart with me in the midst of a fierce conflict, for Tabetha laid into Abraham with claws and teeth. I was first under, then over, tossed hither and yon by the two combatants, and when at last Abraham got off all fours and scudded round the corner of the porch with tail tucked, and old Tabetha at his heels, I lay like a wounded soldier on the battlefield. And there, with eyes staring toward the sky and the sun blistering my face, Hattie found me a little later. She came with two friends who were to accompany her on her morning walk.

"Mercy me, lookie at Myrtle!" cried Hattie.

"Mercy me! Lookie at Myrtle!" cried Hattie. (My name is Myrtle.)

"Well, she looks as if a cyclone had struck her," remarked one of the friends in a cold-blooded manner.

"It's the work of old Tab and Abe," declared Hattie, grabbing me up by one arm. Oh, heartlessness, cruelty! She didn't seem to care if I were demolished. "Something's got to be done with that pair—that pup and cat—or they'll kill each other," she went on, dragging me into the house by one hand and tossing me on the sofa. But not a word of pity for me—not one. I felt my heart snap with the pain of her coldness—her indifference. "I can't take Myrtle now—she's such a sight!" were her next words. "I'll run up stairs and get Jenny May; she's clean, and I haven't had her out for a long, long time."

Another shaft went through my heart. Jenny May was my rival, a doll who had been Hattie's companion before I came. She had never liked me for the simple reason that I had supplanted her in Hattie's good favors.

So there I was left, torn, heartbroken and dirty, nearly—on the sofa in the parlor, while Hattie ran off to get my rival to take my place. And there I was an hour later, when Mr. Bob Travis called, bringing his chum to meet Ethel. (And from my heart I say "Long live Mr. Bob Travis." He proved a timely friend to me.) Just as he had begun to tell his friend of Ethel in came Hattie to carry poor me from the room. She nodded to Mr. Bob, was introduced to his companion, then she grabbed me and held me behind her, hiding me, of course.

"Heigho! Let's have a peep at your doll," said Mr. Bob, in the gayest of spirits, taking hold of Hattie's arm.

"No, no," said Hattie, shaking her head. "She's too dirty."

"What!" asked Mr. Bob in astonishment. "Is she the dolly you got Christmas? Why, I'm afraid you're a careless little mother to let her get so untidy."

"Oh, it was Abe and Tab," confessed Hattie, feeling ashamed of herself.

"Well, come—let's see her," insisted Mr. Bob. "She was the most beautiful doll I ever saw when you got her. She was an imported French lady, you know. Too bad that a common pup and a mousetrap should bring her to ruin."

Hattie brought me round into view, and Mr. Bob said gently (he's a good-hearted fellow and I hope Miss Ethel will marry him some day, so I do): "Oh, poor, poor Lady Dolly! But she only needs a bit of attention, then she'll look like her old beautiful self again. In the mean time, flog Abe and turn Tabetha from the place."

Just at this minute a step was heard in the hall and in came Ethel looking like a fairy. Mr. Bob had eyes for me no longer, but the dear fellow had done me the greatest kindness. His words of praise had reinstated me in my Hattie's favor once more.

Oh, how fickle is human nature!

Taking me tenderly in her arms, Hattie carried me to her playroom, where her two friends awaited her.

"Mr. Bob Travis says Myrtle is a French lady, important. So [illegible]" (She got the word "imported" and "important" mixed, you see.) "I'm going to put her white silk dress on her and comb her hair and take her to Margery's birthday party this afternoon. She'll be the handsomest doll there. And if that ugly pup Abe or that old cat, Tab, ever lay claws on her again they're—"

"What?" asked one of the little friends.

"They're goners!" answered Hattie, gently wiping the dust from my French nose and hugging me to her breast.

Happiness again.

Down in the shady cool—
For now there ain't no school,

Sunbonnets.

Dear little girls with flowing curls
Must wear their bonnets tight
Or they will tan brown as they run,
And then they'll look a fright.

And here's the way they go to play
With bonnets on—Dear me
With never a care for skin nor hair,
But they're pretty enough—you see.

So let them run and have their fun
While old Sol's jolly kiss
Will touch the hair and faces fair
With tan for each little miss.

FLORENCE MAY

Clever Bessie, and the Secrets She Revealed to Helen.

BY HELENA DAVIS

"Oh, oh!" cried Helen, standing in the center of Bessie's pretty room and looking about her with admiration and surprise.

Her admiration was for the dear, sweet little room—"a perfect darling"—and her surprise was over the fact that Bessie had arranged the room herself, furnishing it with "odds and ends of any old household junk" that her mother had no use for.

"How did you do it?" Helen asked, waving her hands round the dainty apartment. "Tell me, for I want to take a lesson in the sort of economy that allows one to make a fine show out of nothing."

The bed that [illegible] ration.

"Well, dearie," laughed Bessie, "I'm sure that after you've heard the secret you'll change your mind about accomplishing anything out of nothing. To be sure I didn't spend any money—except a few dollars—but I spent lots of time in work, work, work."

"And you utilized ingenuity and good taste along with your work," said Helen.

"Well, I flatter myself that I have good taste, too, for otherwise I could not appreciate what you have done in this little room. And I am willing to work, work, work also, if I can obtain the result that you have obtained." And the enthusiastic Helen again waved her hands about the little room, which was such a revelation to her.

Until vacation had come Bessie had shared a room with her older sister, who had been one of the season's high school graduates and who had stepped from the graduating platform into society. Consequently, as became a gay debutante who must needs keep hours a trifle later than a little school maiden like Bessie is, it was decided that she should have a room to herself, so that her goings and comings might not interfere with the early retirings at night of Bessie.

Then Bessie's mother found herself confronted by the problem of no extra room in the house except the guest chamber, and that of course must be kept for company. So, where was she to stow away her little 14-year-old Bess?

But Bess solved the problem by laying hands on another's possession.

"Give brother Jim's den to me," she said. "Since he's gone away to college he never uses it any more, for during vacation he's off visiting friends, playing golf, rowing or hunting, and is seldom at home except for occasional meals and to sleep. He has no legal rights, as I can see, to two rooms, while I, a member of the family in good standing, have not where to lay my head."

They all laughed at Bessie's way of making her claims, but all agreed that she was right, and Jim very generously relinquished his old den to her, for he and Bessie were the best of comrades always, and Jim had fallen into a pretty habit of never refusing her anything which it was in his power to grant.

"The place is yours," said Jim, handing proprietorship of the den over to Bessie one morning. "Keep anything in there that you can use—throw the rest of it in the star chasm or out of the window if it suits your convenience better."

So Bessie went to work with a will, and one week from the day on which she took possession of the former den she rested from her labors and looked about her with a feeling of genuine satisfaction.

Then she called to her parents and sister to come up and see what her week's work had accomplished. They were more than pleased and greatly astonished at the sight of the pretty apartment. "Why, I'll go into the interior decorating business," declared Bessie's father, indulgently. "I'll buy a few loads of old broken furniture, some packing boxes, a few boards, a keg of paint, some colored cotton stuffs and turn them over to Bessie to use as her genius prompts. I'll get rich out of the profits."

"Guess I'll have something to say about the pocket the profits roll into," laughed Bessie, pleased by her father's evident approval of her efforts.

But it was Jim who put the wreath of laurel on top of Bessie's head. In the evening of that day he came bounding up stairs in response to Bessie's invitation to peep in on her after supper. When he stepped into the room his eyes opened and he fairly gasped. "Why, Bess, you're a little magician, you are, you're—why, on my soul, you're a—brick!"

That was all the praise Bessie wanted. To be a "brick" in big college Jim's estimation meant something more than being just an ordinary genius. She walked about the room with her head very high as she "showed off" the wonders of her handiwork and introduced Jim to old friends in new coats, as he expressed it, when looking at pieces of old furniture made new by paint, cushions and covers.

Next morning Bessie drove round in her phaeton and got her best friend, Helen, who she took home with her to see her new room. Helen's pleasure and surprise have been told in the beginning of this story.

"Now come, dear, and get better acquainted with the occupants of my room," said Bessie, putting her arm round her friend's waist and leading her round the room, stopping in front of a dainty dimity-draped dressing table. "Here is an old washstand with its interior gone—that is to say, its drawers, and I've converted it into quite a neat piece, you see. I had our stableman saw off some boards for me which I've put in as shelves. They are convenient to fold the linens on. The mirror came from the attic, where it lay on account of a crippled frame. The drapery and ribbon bow hides its infirmity," and Bessie laughed. "Now, view the uncovered window seat," and she lifted the valance of cretonne from a long rough wooden box. "A lot of cloth, some tacks, excelsior for padding and it's I've a nice window seat as well as a place to hide my shoes and slippers in."

"But your writing desk—that is surely brand new," exclaimed Helen. "And isn't it beautiful!"

"No, indeed, that writing desk belonged to Jim—was here in his den. It was the sorriest sight you can imagine. Why, it was so scratched and scarred that it looked as if it had had the smallpox. But I did need a writing desk, and I thought out a plan to fix it up presentable. I bought a quart can of white enamel paint and set to work to cover the desk's blemishes. After it was done—or, rather, after I was done painting it—there seemed to be something lacking, just as an all-white dimity [illegible] a bit of gay ribbon to kill its stare. Well, sister's oil paints and brushes were handy. I conceived the idea of violets scattered over the white surface. You see the result."

"Wonderful! Perfectly wonderful!" exclaimed Helen, amazed that Bessie could do so artistic a bit of work.

"And the chairs, you see, is done to match," went on Bessie. "In fact, all the chairs of my room are old things picked out of the attic, but they look quite respectable in their white paint, cushions and headrests and some with clean dresses of white linen."

"Here is an old washstand with its interior gone."

"And your bed—what is it? I'm curious to know. It is lovely, yet I never saw one arranged just like it before," said Helen, going to the bed which stood across one corner of the room.

"That is my pet piece of furniture," answered Bessie. "It is nothing in the world except a wire spring, extra wide cot. The uprights that are at the four corners to hold the canopy frame are plain strips of pine nailed securely into place. The stable man is a pretty good carpenter, and he helped me build my bed. The framework is covered, you see, with plain white muslin. Mamma gave me an old sheet for the purpose. But the green and white striped scrim, which is so cool and launders so nicely, hides all that framework."

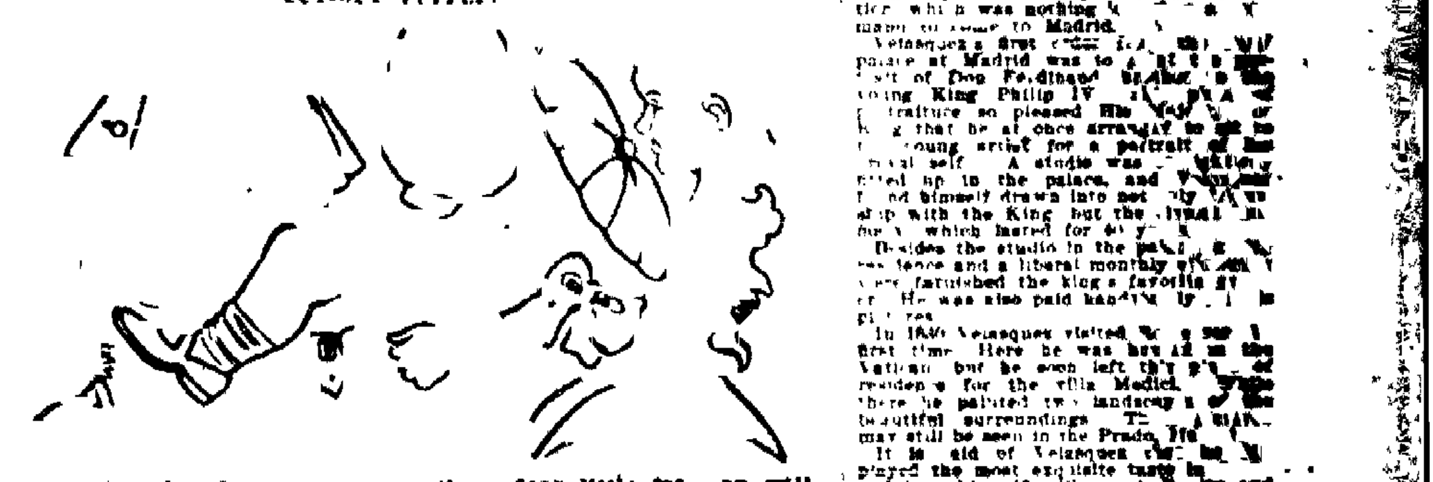
Helen looked and looked, then she said: "Bess, you're a genius, you surely are a wonderful girl."

"Oh, it's only work—a love of it, you know. Now, Nell, how do you like my floor? See, I painted the border a dark walnut, as that matches anything. Instead of a rug I've stretched [illegible] this center square of green burlap. I'm fond of white and green for my [illegible]. Then, my book shelves—Jim's old ones—have been made resplendent with a new silkoline curtain. I think the colors, [illegible], gold, [illegible] and brown—har monize well with the wallpaper, don't you?"

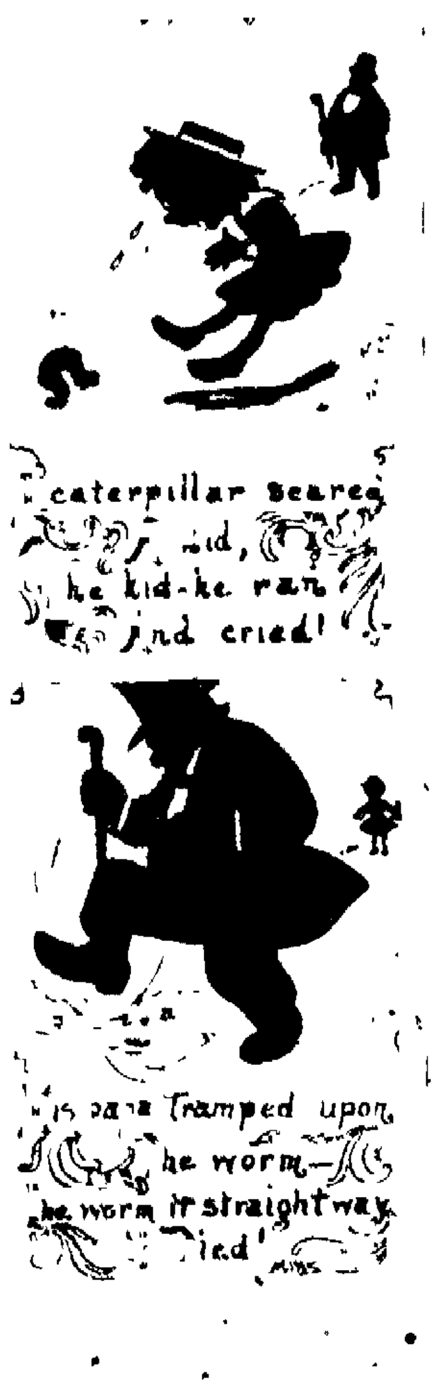
But just then the luncheon bell rang, and as the two happy little girls ran down to the dining room Bessie could be heard unfolding further secrets concerning the fixing of new furniture for her "dear little room, all her very own."

"It's just work, work, work, that will accomplish anything, dear," she said, "especially if the hands that do the work are willing hands."

CUT-OUT PUZZLE.



By joining the above parts correctly a dear little [illegible] will appear. After pasting the figure together on a piece of white paper, take water colors and tint the face, hands and legs flesh color, hair brown, cap red, leave collar and belt white, paint suit gray, slippers black and stockings and tie blue. Figure properly put together given in next week's issue.



GLAD AS A GAME

There is joy and sport in this world of ours,
And over the graves grow the beautiful flowers;

If our hearts were but open to good and the bright,
And closed to the ill as we close them at night—

Then life might be glad as the game of a child
And with gladness the world would not so be defiled.

Johnny Boy's Essay.

BY HELEN DAVIS

Johnny Boy's teacher told the pupils in Johnny's class to each write an essay of 300 words on the subject "The Last Day of School and Its Importance."

"It's a dreadful long 300 words," mused Johnny Boy. "But if I must tackel it, here goes."

Then he settled himself uncomfortably at his desk and touching the point of his pencil to his tongue he began to write: "The last day of school is a very very grate day."

Getting this far he paused for want of another idea. He read over what he had written three times and each time he felt glad that he had used the word "very" twice. It made the essay longer, and length was what he wanted. He fidgeted about in his seat, again moistened his pencil point on his tongue and resumed: "The reason I like the last day of school to close is because I won't have to come to it any more for a long, long, long time."

Ah, that writing the word "long" three times was a tremendous stroke! How had he ever thought of it? Johnny Boy became deeply interested, now that the work progressed so rapidly. Again he set to work and added to what he had already written: "And I can go fishing on nice, nice, nice, nice days, along with the other kids. If I katch fish I hope they will be a grate big, big, big, big, big whappers, for I feel as if I could eat a dozen fried whole this minit."

Johnny Boy lifted his pencil from the paper and ran over what he had written. "Good enough," he chuckled. Then he looked across the aisle at Tim Sanders, who was struggling with his thoughts, for he sat kicking his heel against the first of the seat, his eye cocked up toward the ceiling, as if attempting to catch a glimpse of the literary muse in its [illegible] surface. He was busy chewing the rubber end of his pencil and did not look Johnny's in direction although that youngster was trying to catch his attention. Not daring to be outdone Johnny wrote on a corner of his copybook this question: "How many words have you wrote, Tim?" and tore off the piece of writing, bit it into a compact ball and tossed it into Tim's lap when the teacher was not looking.

Tim's eye [illegible] from the ceiling and perused the crumpled note. Turning toward Johnny he winked and held up seven fingers.

Only seven! Johnny is glad [illegible] that he was [illegible] caught in the act by [illegible], who at that [illegible] faced about. But he [illegible] became active and [illegible] his work. "When [illegible] is out [illegible]" he wrote. "I will be powerful, powerful, powerful, powerful, powerful happy. I will not only go fishing but I will go swimming in the cool, cool, cool, cool, cool water what looks so butiful, butiful, butiful, butiful, butiful, butiful, butiful."

"John Scott! What do you mean by [illegible] the words cool and beautiful in such [illegible]? And see how you've spelled beautiful, too. What do you mean, sir?"

It was Teacher's voice that broke on his ear from over his shoulder! He started and laid his hand guiltily over his writing. He was caught, then! And it made him nervous to be thus taken unawares. Teacher had this habit of slipping upon a fellow without warning and it was unpleasant to be disturbed in one's thoughts. Surely, when one was "composing" one ought to be allowed a certain liberty, and if one wanted to employ a number of adjectives to express an idea strongly, one should not be questioned about it. Besides, adjectives did not belong to any certain individual on earth. Mr. Webster, and he was dead long since and had willed his big book of words to any one who saw fit to use it. So thought Johnny Boy as he held his pudgy hand, with unkempt nails and a number of warts on it, over the essay.

"Well," said teacher, "why don't you answer me? Remove your hand from that writing."

Johnny Boy drew his hand away and Teacher deliberately read aloud what he had written. The school paid attention—as it always does in a case of this kind—and after Teacher had emphasized the repeated adjectives, with due regard for their significance, the school bodily snickered.

"Now, John Scott, go to the blackboard and write the word [illegible] 100 times. After that [illegible] and write your essay [illegible] of what I say. If you repeat an adjective oftener than is absolutely necessary to express yourself I shall attend to your case after school. And it will require a list of adjectives longer than you now have to express what will take place in such an event. Now, to the board."

And Teacher pointed a long, stiff finger toward the blackboard whither Johnny Boy went and began writing as high up as his short arm would allow: "Chota, chota, chota."

What Teacher said when she noticed Johnny's spelling of the word can be imagined.

As an afterthought, Johnny was heard to say after school [illegible] out that essay writing was not as easy as eating when one was hungry. And Tim Sanders looked at him and winked, saying: "They are my sentiments, too."

Little Biographies of Big Masters.

(Note to Children.—Cut out and paste in a scrapbook the series of sketches now appearing in this department entitled "Little Biographies of Big Masters." These sketches will be valuable for future reference.)

It was at Seville, Spain, in the year 1599, sometime about the 1st of June, that the subject of this sketch, Diego Rodriguez de Silva Velasquez, was born.

On his father's side he belonged to the Portuguese, and on his mother's side [illegible] the name by which the great artist is known came from his mother's people. This was following out an old Andalusian custom. Velasquez studied first with the eccentric master Francisco de Herrera, who was very erratic, though very talented with brush and color. From Herrera's studio Velasquez went to that of Francisco Pacheco, where he remained a pupil for five years, at the end of which time he married Pacheco's daughter, Juana Miranda, who was about Velasquez's own age. At the time of his marriage Velasquez was only 19.

In 1622 Velasquez had a letter [illegible] Don Juan de Fonseca [illegible] him, at the request of the [illegible] Olivares, to paint [illegible] at Madrid. A sum equivalent to [illegible] traveling expenses accompanied the [illegible] which was nothing [illegible] to come to Madrid.

Velasquez's first order [illegible] palace at Madrid was to paint [illegible] of Don Fernando [illegible] young King Philip IV [illegible] portraiture so pleased His Majesty the King that he at once arranged [illegible] young artist for a portrait of his royal self. A studio was [illegible] fitted up in the palace, and Velasquez found himself drawn into not only [illegible] ship with the King, but the [illegible] which lasted for [illegible] years.

Besides the studio in the palace [illegible] residence and a liberal monthly [illegible] were furnished the king's favorite [illegible]. He was also paid handsomely for his pictures.

In 1629 Velasquez visited [illegible] first time. Here he was housed in the Vatican, but he soon left this place of residence for the villa Medici. There he painted two landscapes of the beautiful surroundings. These [illegible] may still be seen in the Prado [illegible]

It is said of Velasquez that he displayed the most exquisite taste in [illegible] and bore himself with great [illegible] courtly grace.

On August 6, 1660, after an illness of about 10 days, the greatest [illegible] painter of any time, Velasquez, [illegible] life, but till Time shall have [illegible] his canvases to dust he shall live in the hearts of the generations that follow to look upon his handiwork with reverence and wonder. If not the greatest portrait painter none have been greater than he.

An art critic has this to say of his genius: "It is impossible to estimate Velasquez without [illegible] to his [illegible]. His portraits [illegible]. They must be seen. He elevated that branch to the dignity of history. He drew the minds of men. They live, breathe and seem ready to walk out of their frames. * * * We look into space, into a room, into the reflection of a mirror."

Oh, Fly!

"Oh me, oh my!" cried a weary little fly.
"I'm so tired flying round
Guess I'll drop down on the ground."

But a table caught his sight
On the table he did light
Jug of syrup standing near Fly approached it without fear

"Oh me, oh my!" little fly began to cry,
"In this jug of lovely sweet
I am stuck with all my feet."

But another fly flew by
Heard his comrade sadly cry
Came he to the rescue quick,
Jerked him from the syrup thick

"Oh me, oh my!" Now I know that I shall die,
"For my legs are left behind
And some others I can't find!"

But his friend, a wise old guy
Said, "you are a foolish fly!
You have wings both good and [illegible]
They will take you right along
You can go back to the sweet,
Take your [illegible] and on your old feet,
Eat your fill, then fly away

The Wonder Story of Japan's Navy and Its Admiral

ON Admiral [illegible] Togo, one of the [illegible] figures [illegible] any [illegible] is [illegible] has ever fallen to the [illegible] of a single individual [illegible] placed by Nelson [illegible] preservation of the English [illegible] race was [illegible] fraught with [illegible] It has been his destiny to [illegible] one of the most splendid [illegible] in [illegible] by the hand of Providence [illegible] [illegible] the globe [illegible] the working of [illegible] the hand of [illegible] may be believed [illegible] complete survey of all the possibilities of the situation [illegible] in which there [illegible]

There [illegible] Count Kurino the Japanese minister at St Petersburg was ordered to return home with all his entourage [illegible] informed of his summons, there was [illegible] of several torpedo boats It was then [illegible] into the Russian [illegible] Makaroff [illegible] the destruction [illegible] the great [illegible] Makaroff [illegible] the Grand Duke Cyril [illegible] captain of the vessel [illegible] escaped. The exact nature of the misfortune was not understood for some time but it was made known at a subsequent period that while Makaroff was engaging the main body of the Japanese squadron one of Togo's smaller ships planted a mine in the course by which the Russian must return. In this [illegible] Muscovite [illegible] believed [illegible] report [illegible] sailor was [illegible] of diplomatic [illegible] The time had come when [illegible] personality was [illegible] without parley [illegible] Japan [illegible] were those of a [illegible] Throughout the length and [illegible] his presence [illegible] Port Arthur [illegible] the bridge [illegible] had no definite knowledge of the Russian vessel's terrible fate until Togo turned to them and announced [illegible] a statement of the condition of things every one believed.

At last the day came when the admiral made a public announcement that no further sortie of the imprisoned [illegible] Port Arthur squadron remained in [illegible] safely to the [illegible] toward the North [illegible] extract a good deal of [illegible] from the blunder It is asserted by some of the war correspondents that Togo could never hear the incident mentioned without losing his gravity.

[illegible] puzzled the [illegible] and [illegible] advancing [illegible] recipient of such benevolent treatment at whatever port it chanced to touch. When they saw [illegible] permitting the Russian fleet to use their waters for purposes of coaling and provisioning they began to believe that Europe was [illegible] If Europe was [illegible] that Rojestvensky and his ships should reach Port Arthur in time to make an attempt to release the bottled fleet. As long as the Port Arthur squadron remained in [illegible]

[illegible] of ovation. A man of [illegible] Togo had been [illegible] bored. At every fresh expression of the popular idolatry he shook his head and pointed to his tours and the other [illegible]

[illegible] set about organizing a [illegible] but he refused to take any part in it. He had come to the capital not for recreation but [illegible] conferences from the [illegible] of the admiralty who wished to consult with him about the future conduct of the naval [illegible] and [illegible] to be known [illegible] greatest kind [illegible] His wish was [illegible] After the [illegible] Tokyo took [illegible] impulses [illegible] and returned to [illegible] habitual calm. The [illegible] his countrymen deferred to [illegible] showed [illegible] that Japan [illegible] no rival in [illegible]

[illegible] sense of the term of princes or even of noble birth. He is simply a gentleman of good lineage, a scion of the great Satsuma clan, a clan to which so many of the bright men of new Japan belong.

[illegible] It was in the later [illegible] Togo [illegible] these [illegible] Naniwa [illegible] perception [illegible] The [illegible] willing to [illegible] Kongo. He was [illegible] selected for the [illegible] because [illegible] well established [illegible] into fighting [illegible] in the shortest time. In the course of the long [illegible] touched at [illegible] the Sandwich [illegible] sailed [illegible] Islands [illegible] were then [illegible] known [illegible] by Togo. Until the battle of the Yalu Togo was only a captain. For his services at that time he was rewarded with the rank of rear admiral. The Marquis Ito, Japan's most influential statesman, declared at that time that Togo was the peer of any sailor of his day. [illegible] that this obtained for him the [illegible] order of the Rising Sun, a distinction shared by only about twenty [illegible] He has recently been admitted to the first order of the Rising Sun, an [illegible] held by only two other men in the empire, Prince Arisugawa and Marquis Ito.

In person Admiral Togo is a short and somewhat stout man with an iron gray beard and mustache and a distinctively Japanese physiognomy. He is not a man of words—not taciturn but reserved. Most of all he is alert of perception but amazingly calm and unprecipitate in action. He knows his fleet both collectively and individually. His men believe that he knows the spirit and temper of every one of them. While he has little mercy on himself and is inclined to look upon responsibility in its most serious aspects he is never a martinet. He is reputed to be the most reasonable man in the service, never demanding of a man more than he can supply without hardship. He has permitted his men to see so many glimpses of his human side that they are ready to follow him without question. He is comparatively a poor man and lives in a modest [illegible] house in Tokyo with his wife and two children. He is a living illustration [illegible] the greatness that makes all pecuniary recompense contemptible, the [illegible] eminence that is separate from all else save the everlasting cry of gratitude which rises from the lips of his countrymen.

THE MEN WHO HAVE MADE THE JAPANESE NAVY ONE OF THE BEST IN THE WORLD

Yamamoto is the minister of ma[illegible] and has been largely instrumental in procuring the best equipment and in providing for [illegible] officers the best [illegible] available. Togo, Kamimura [illegible] the three great Japanese fighting admirals of today, and Admiral Ito is the man to whom at the beginning of the present war was intrusted the [illegible] and the laying out of plans for their operation. He it was who in the war with China in 1894 won the battle of the Yalu.

nothing else for the Russian foreign minister to do but dictate similar instructions to Baron von Rosen, the empire's representative at Tokyo. Both countries knew what it meant. Both knew that it was equivalent to a declaration of war. Both nations accepted it as such and began to hurry the preparations they had long since begun.

Action was lightninglike in its celerity. Japanese officials informed the foreign correspondents of various news gathering agencies that for some time to come there was likely to be a prohibition against all dispatches. They did not explain why, but the reason was not far off. While the journalists were wondering a good deal and grumbling not a little a fleet of six battleships, four cruisers, with torpedo boats and other craft slipped quietly out of the harbor of Sasebo, a naval station on the Korean strait somewhat north of Nagasaki, and steamed quickly to Port Arthur. Here seven of the finest battleships of the Russian navy, its very flower, an armored cruiser and several less formidable ships lay at anchor unsuspecting molestation in one of the most secure harbors on the coast of east Asia. Just before midnight on Feb. 8 the Japanese squadron dashed in upon the unprepared Muscovites.

Taken thus unawares the amazed seamen of the czar stood their ground as best they could. Their guns were soon in action and a furious exchange of rapid fire artillery was in progress. Suddenly Admiral Togo's torpedo boats appeared among the Russian vessels and began to deliver torpedoes [illegible] deadly [illegible] of the czar's [illegible] dependable sea fortress [illegible] the cruiser Pallada [illegible] Czarevitch were sunk [illegible] shallow water [illegible] the [illegible]

Having [illegible] Admiral Togo [illegible] days of day [illegible] tacked again [illegible] serious damage [illegible] Poltava [illegible] cruisers [illegible] at Tokyo [illegible] killed and [illegible] engagement [illegible] brilliant achievement [illegible] news fell like a stroke upon [illegible] for it was compelled to [illegible] that its sea power in the far east had been reduced [illegible] almost pitiable [illegible] stunning blow.

[illegible] the Russian [illegible] on the eastern [illegible] the same day [illegible] made his [illegible] officer [illegible] stone [illegible] Korea [illegible] mosquito fleet [illegible] Japanese soldiers. He was [illegible] neither conquer [illegible] that the Russians began to lose faith in the naval ability of [illegible] who had been in [illegible] of the ill fated Makaroff [illegible] the czar [illegible] so long [illegible] vigorous [illegible] Makaroff [illegible] a great [illegible] Port Arthur [illegible] forts and no [illegible] was felt by the garrison at that [illegible] In the meantime Admiral Togo [illegible] strong [illegible] close enough to [illegible] to fire a few [illegible] but [illegible] Admiral Makaroff [illegible] of a fleet of seven merchantmen sent to block the channel was struck by a shell from one of the forts, and all on board were destroyed.

During his [illegible] at Port Arthur Admiral Makaroff was the victim of much adverse criticism, but he was [illegible] He made a naval sortie which did [illegible] proved the claim [illegible] of the Japanese [illegible] ships gave great [illegible] and corresponding annoyance to the Japanese [illegible] naval genius of Admiral [illegible] same engagement the battleship Pobieda was badly damaged.

Through almost all of that eventful summer one of the bravest and most [illegible] admirals of the Japanese navy [illegible] left him still a hero [illegible] Ever since the beginning of the war on Feb. 8 Kamimura [illegible] command of [illegible] Vladivostok [illegible] squadron and [illegible] start. Later he was severely criticised for inactivity [illegible] Admiral Skrydloff's ships were [illegible] raids [illegible] ships [illegible] Korea. The Japanese [illegible] were so enraged [illegible] their admiral [illegible] numerous public demonstrations in the streets of the capital and [illegible] demanding that [illegible] admiral should come [illegible] It was to bless an agonizing experience for Kamimura. He had achieved a record in the Chinese war almost equal to that of [illegible]

But he contented himself with the knowledge that a satisfactory reaction would [illegible] Before the close of the summer he [illegible] public that he had been [illegible] the orders of his naval superiors [illegible] authorities at Tokyo had [illegible] Skrydloff [illegible] shipping [illegible] fleet at Port Arthur [illegible] attention whatever to [illegible] shipping. Therefore Kamimura [illegible] When the Russian admiral did attempt to slip through the strait on one foggy morning Kamimura inflicted on him a severe blow [illegible] conflict the Rurik, one of the best vessels [illegible] found a rest [illegible] bottom of the [illegible] Russia [illegible] land force [illegible] hotly contested [illegible] For a short [illegible] land operations [illegible] doings of the navy [illegible] Nogi [illegible] but partial [illegible] within the [illegible] were being [illegible] ships would be made. This document will be cherished for years as one of the most precious possessions of the island empire. It was received in Japan with [illegible] enthusiasm [illegible] Japanese found [illegible] themselves to the charm of the admiral's literary style. The educated Japanese is before every thing a [illegible] There is absolutely nothing in life so fascinating to him as words. By drawing on the almost limitless treasures of the ideographs used in the Japanese written language Admiral Togo obtains felicities of expression which [illegible] the hearts of the scholars of his country an admiration equal to that inspired by his naval prowess. He is not alone the "Nelson of the Japanese navy," he is the premier classic writer of Japan.

It is not denied that the extinction of the Port Arthur fleet came as a profound relief to the nation. There had never been the slightest evidence of trepidation in the empire when news came of the actual departure of the Baltic fleet for the far east. The country's troops were still fruitlessly, it almost seemed, lashing out their lives against the stone and iron of the apparently impregnable fortress. If the [illegible] hearts quailed for a moment at thought of the new [illegible] toward the area in which Japan's strength was already [illegible] no word of apprehension [illegible] in the streets of [illegible] being [illegible] situation was not devoid of anxiety for Japan. The nation held out its arms to [illegible] the fact that the five battleships and the strong cruisers constituting the remnant of the splendid armament on which Russia had based her loudly trumpeted intention of driving him and his compatriots into the sea would never be able to emerge from their prison. Long before the succoring Baltic fleet reached Asiatic waters he was able to announce officially "the disabling of almost all of the enemy's fleet in these waters." A double sense of relief was felt by the nation, first because a possible danger had been averted, and second because the annoying question of assistance given the Baltic fleet on its voyage lost much of its practical force and became only a matter of diplomacy.

Very shortly after this quieting declaration Togo followed it to Tokyo. He received a welcome which must have convinced him of the national gratitude. Delegates from the emperor and empress, the presidents of the two houses of the diet, the ministers of state and all the high dignitaries of the capital, [illegible] tens of thousands of [illegible] vociferous citizens [illegible] Kamimura at the station [illegible] forcible and loving possession of the [illegible]

His senior in rank, Admiral Count Ito, who [illegible] be confused with the statesman Marquis Ito, who was [illegible] manned by members of this clan. At the same time [illegible] Japanese army was drawn from the Choshu clan. Nowadays, however, neither army nor navy is entirely given over to these two important [illegible] in the empire. There is [illegible] a larger proportion of men from [illegible] tribes. When Togo entered the navy its entire personnel was Satsuma.

Admiral Togo received a greater part of his education at the naval college at [illegible] England. He went through the regular course of study [illegible] at that institution thirty odd years ago. Returning home at the [illegible] of his school life he was employed [illegible] various minor government duties for a number of years. In 1894, when the war between China and Japan broke out, he was in command of the Naniwa, a cruiser of 3,650 tons. During this war he made much reputation and proved himself to be a first class fighting man.

It was in connection with a matter demanding great exercise of judgment and force of character that Admiral Togo first became known to the world at large [illegible] oft told story, but it illustrates better than any other incident the character of the man who even then [illegible]

MARRIAGE IN INDIA.

A lady missionary who has spent some years in India and whose work is particularly concerned with an orphanage conducted under American auspices in Calcutta has given an account of the way in which marriages are arranged in India. She refers to the meetings between the girls of the orphanages and the young Christian men of the neighborhood and says that scarcely a week passed without the managers of the institution being petitioned by some young man for assistance in obtaining a wife. "Of course we [illegible] induce a girl to get married if she does not feel inclined that way," said the missionary, "but the majority of the girls are perfectly willing [illegible] are petitioned by [illegible] have the next chance. Many Difficulties Presented by the Umpire Question

LO, the poor umpire is having his troubles these days and, incidentally, so are the "scrappy" managers, captains and players. The work of both the National and American league umpiring staffs seems to have provoked an unusual amount of "kicking," and league officials are bent on putting a stop to the disturbances.

Whole encyclopedias have been written on the umpire question. Special sessions of congress and of state legislatures have from time to time been contemplated to dispose of mooted questions [illegible] appertaining [illegible] [illegible] have spent nights of worry and unrest, great editors have broken down with nervous prostration, life insurance directors have refused to spend anybody's money except their own and President Roosevelt put a sudden stop to his bear hunting expedition—why? Simply because major league ball games show a tendency to become exhibitions of disorderly disputes rather than demonstrations of athletic prowess.

Past and Present Conditions.

There was a time when a ball game [illegible] of the big leagues could be [illegible] in advance to be enjoyable. Of late, however, turbulent tempers seem to be so largely on the increase that protests resemble more than anything else a stabbing party, in which a Russian outpost and a troop of Japanese cavalry play the principal roles.

Trouble rose to such a pitch in the National league recently that President Pulliam issued a ukase that was intended to put a damper on the fractious coachers and managers who decorate the side lines, but do not play. Pulliam's pronunciamento was in the nature of an open letter addressed to all National league umpires. In substance it provided that no umpire should heed for a moment the protest of any man not actually playing in the game in question and who was not the field captain of a team.

Against McGraw.

The notice was directed principally against Johnny McGraw, yclept "Muggsy," manager of the champion New York Nationals. McGraw doesn't play any more except in cases of emergency. He bosses his team from the coaching lines and now and then "hands" a wordy bouquet to the umpire. So aggressive had McGraw become that Pulliam took his pen in hand, as I have related. Also as McGraw had accused President Barney Dreyfuss of Pittsburg of controlling umpires Pulliam announced that a special meeting of league dictators would be called in Boston to consider the charge with a view to reprimanding McGraw. Pulliam's statement that McGraw's "alleged charges had brought about "a crisis in the national game" was little short of ridiculous no matter what the merits or demerits of the controversy may be. The president should not get excited, as rush of blood to the head is apt to follow in warm weather. A remark of that sort is apt to cause smiles among "hardened" ball followers, who realise that McGraw nor any other individual manager could bring about a crisis in the game by any charges he might make against a rival.

Two Sides to Question.

President Pulliam is working on the principle that his umpires are always right. While I believe the judges of play are ill treated unjustly on most occasions, yet there are times when they would provoke a brass statue to fuming maledictions. It is for the best interests of the game that umpires be given perhaps more official support than they deserve. Discipline is of more importance than a few points added to or subtracted from a team's percentage figures. But they should be watched carefully by their league employers and reprimanded privately when necessary. One frequent practice should be severely frowned on—that of "balancing" a poor decision by another one equally bad, but in favor of the team injured in the first instance.

An Example.

In a recent National game a certain umpire called safe a runner who was caught off second at least four feet in an attempt to steal the base. The tremendous uproar from the stands and bleachers evidently convinced the umpire that he was wrong, for when the runner advanced to third on a passed ball and reached the base as safely as any man ever reached any base in the history of baseball the official called out and almost provoked a riot. He thus made enemies of the men on both teams and convinced players and spectators that he was an incompetent judge of play. The umpire will be a "marked" man in the city where the game was played for the rest of his baseball career. [illegible] decisions in that manner should be prohibited by league [illegible] under pain of dismissal, for an umpire who disgusts the public drives dollars from the club's receipts and destroys popular confidence and interest.

What a Veteran Says.

A veteran umpire spoke to the writer recently regarding the umpire's troubles. Said he:

"The one great handicap to the umpire is the fact that he sees the ball, the play or the runner from a single side or angle. In every game plays will happen and balls will be pitched that players and the public will have better opportunities to judge than the umpire. Players are on all sides of the runner, and so are the spectators.

A close play on the bases can only be judged [illegible] in most cases when the umpire is at a right angle to the runner [illegible] baseman who attempts to re[illegible]. When a runner is in a di[illegible] the umpire and the base it is the hardest thing in the world on a close play to tell whether the ball or the man reaches the bag first. The runner's body, of course, hides the [illegible] and it is impossible to determine the exact moment when his foot touches it."

HARRY GRANT.

PITCHER "RUBE" WADDELL OF THE PHILADELPHIA AMERICANS.

PITCHER WEIMER OF THE CHICAGO NATIONALS AT THE BAT.

Weimer is the crack twirler on Frank Selee's Chicago National league staff. Wicker is his closest rival for stellar honors. In addition to his pitching ability, Weimer is a fairly strong batsman, rather remarkable for a pitcher.

THE DEACON IN FORM.

"Deacon" Phillippi of the Pittsburg pitching staff was in poor form last season. He says now he is so healthy that a baseball looks to him no bigger than a liver pill.

SEVENTY PEOPLE, BUT—

"I heard a story the other day about an advance agent," said Maclyn Arbuckle of "The County Chairman" company, "which has at least the merit of originality and further proves the audacity of these gentlemen—that is, some of them. He reached a small town in the interior of a western state, and the following dialogue took place:

"'What style of piece is your show?' questioned the local manager.

"'Farce comedy,' replied the publicity promoter.

"'How many people do you carry?'

"'Seventy.'

"The manager, of course, was astonished, and the report was circulated all around the village, coming in the course of time to the hotel keeper. When the advance agent went to make arrangements for his people he found the tavern in a chaotic state. Lumber was being pulled out of rooms that had long been unused, and the landlord was running up and down stairs like mad. He finally stopped long enough to talk with the advance man.

"'I hear you carry seventy people,' said the boniface, 'and by puttin' some in the kitchen and movin' the melodeon out of the settin' room I can take care of forty. The rest of 'em we can put away over the drug store and down at Mis' Ricketts. Seventy people! That's a whole lot of show folks.'

"'Don't worry so, my friend,' said the modern Ananias. 'We carry seventy people, but fifty of them are painted on the back drop.'"

"ONE MORE GUESS."

"There's one thing an American actor can't do well," said a man whose appearance gave every indication that he was a typically hardened New York theater goer as he lit a cigarette in the lobby of the Liberty theater the other night during an entr'acte of "The Education of Mr. Pipp."

"What's that?"

"He can't play an English gentleman. He can play any other nationality perfectly, and he can even go so far as to get the English dialect all right, but there's a line of distinction between the Britisher and the Yankee that is too fine for any actor to get. It shows in the Englishman's gait, in his movements and in his inflections, and the only way to get the part of a British swell played right in this country is to import a man for it like this Frederick Courtenay, who does the Englishman so well in this play."

"You can have one more guess," laughed his companion. "Fred Courtenay was born and brought up in America and is as good a Yankee as you are."

SUMMER SHOWS.

There will be three musical comedies in session all summer in New York city if the present business at the houses thus occupied is any indication of what the managers can count upon. They are "Sergeant Brue" at the Knickerbocker, "The Rollicking Girl" at the Herald Square and a play at the Lyric.

Of the dramatic attractions only "The Music Master," at the Bijou, will run to any considerable extent into summer. Mr. Belasco is set upon having Mr. [illegible] after a record breaking engagement of [illegible] consecutive performances, "The College Widow," the most notable success of the year, closed recently.

There will be three roof gardens open all summer on the roofs of the New Amsterdam, the New York and the Victoria. The Hippodrome will, it is promised, keep going well toward autumn, and apparatus is now being installed to cool the house during the hot spell.

OWEN MORAN, BRITISH BANTAM, NOW IN AMERICA.

[illegible] from England to [illegible] the leading American bantams. [illegible] Moran is rated as [illegible] in [illegible] Bowker, the British [illegible] is thought to have a good chance against our little fellows. [illegible] and bait [illegible] match.

GOLF TOURNEYS.

The Country club of Brookline is to be the scene of the Massachusetts state golf championship Sept. 25-30. The all match play method of conducting the event will be retained. No club has yet been awarded the open championship of the Massachusetts association, which will be open only to Bay State professionals. What with the restrictions to "pros" in the metropolitan district at the Fox Hills event in September and a Jersey championship held by itself, an all eastern event seems as far away as ever. What is especially needed for the benefit of the sport is to bring together players situated so far apart that they do not often meet.

COLEMAN'S PLANS.

George Coleman has leased the Orangeburg (N. Y.) track for this season and proposes to make things lively there. He has already claimed fair dates for the week of Sept. 4 and has commenced the organization of the Orangeburg Fair association.

Wrestling Talk Golfer Travis New York Racing

FRANK GOTCH, the ex-champion wrestler, is "making good" on his threat to enter the prize ring. He has secured the services of Kid McCoy and is now letting the Hoosier expert induct him into the mysteries of the fighting game.

McCoy, as one would naturally suppose, predicts great things for his new pupil. McCoy is a good prophet—that is, he always prophesies good things, but they don't always materialize.

At any rate, Gotch starts out with everything in his favor. He has a splendid physique, remarkable endurance and undoubted grit. In a recent bout with McCoy in New York he demonstrated that he already has an advanced knowledge of "mitt pushing."

A Year of Work.

It is understood that McCoy will have Gotch in charge for a year. At the end of that time he will take on several of the second raters. If successful, Gotch will then attempt to draw Champion Jim Jeffries out into the open. Jeff says: "I cannot give the championship title to any one. Let the best man win it." He also adds, "There is no more money or glory in the ring for me, and so I must retire." In spite of these and other remarks of the same sort, it is generally believed that Jeff will respond in the affirmative to a challenge from Gotch later on. He is the only man in sight that has a chance against Jeff now that the latter rules out Marvin Hart as an impossibility.

The Tricky Jenkins.

Gotch, by the way, certainly gained a few points in wrestling generalship in his recent bout with Jenkins. The Cleveland champion clearly outwitted Gotch, although the methods used by Jenkins [illegible] unsportsmanlike. Still, what broad minded folks understand as [illegible] sportsmanship never has been and never will be an element in professional contests. Every time Gotch placed Jenkins in a dangerous position the latter would crawl to the edge of the mat or clutch the ropes. While the practice of "edging" off the mat is in itself unfair, that of holding on to the ropes is, in the opinion of every impartial wrestling authority, little short of foul. Why Referee Tim Hurst allowed Jenkins to indulge in tactics of this sort cannot be guessed. Either he doesn't know much about wrestling or else his eyesight was on this occasion woefully defective. Had Gotch indulged in such methods and he had a perfect right to duplicate any maneuver of Jenkins—the match would probably never have come to an end.

Golfers Imitate Travis.

Golfers in many sections have followed the example of ex-Champion Walter J. Travis in using drivers with abnormally long handles. Instead of the usual thirty-nine or forty inch club, Travis originated a fifty-two inch stick, which, he claims, considerably increases a man's driving power.

None of the imitators of Travis seems to be able to use the lengthened stick to such good advantage as does the ex-champion. He was fairly proficient in its use before he revealed his secret to the public.

It appears that what the average golfer gains in distance with the new club he loses in accuracy. Most players have become so accustomed to a particular position in addressing the ball that even a slight change to accommodate new conditions proves a handicap.

Travis believes that his long stick will enable him to win back the championship title. At any rate, he has begun the season in good form and will probably rule as favorite in the amateur championship tourney.

Like Father, Like Son.

Harry Payne Whitney, elder son of the late William C. Whitney, seems to be imitating the young hero of Vesta Tilley's popular song, "Following in Father's Footsteps." At the recent turf meeting at the new Belmont park, Queens, N. Y., Whitney's horses won a larger sum than any other stable. In all, his thoroughbreds won $20,000, exclusive of wagers, of course.

Whitney has proved himself a keen judge of horseflesh and in future years will probably win the distinction in turf circles held by his father.

Whitney Stud Book.

En passant, it may prove of interest to observe that the late Mr. Whitney published shortly before his death one of the most expensive books in a single volume ever produced in this country. The book was entitled "The Whitney Stud" and contained exhaustive records of the pedigrees and achievements of his horses. The book was never offered for sale, but, like the "Lawson History of the America's Cup," was intended only to be given away to friends of the producer.

New York Turf Conditions.

The increase of the price of race track admissions in New York to $3 has cut down attendance at the various tracks at least 30 per cent. The politicians who own stock in the organizations will now have to be content with only a meager 20 or 25 per cent profit on their holdings. Such is the cruel working of fate. Still passes will be at a greater premium than ever, and possibly the track managers will now consider that the aldermen and state legislators who receive free admission every race day are awarded for their services.

The raise was brought about by the bickerings of the leading bookmakers. The "layers" bickered themselves out of their customary big profits because the Jockey club in pure self defense was compelled to "open" the metropolitan betting rings to any man qualified financially to take wagers. As a result the bookmakers' trust is now "down and out," and the small fry bet takers receive the benefit.

BEN TAVIS.

CHESBRO VERSUS ANSON.

President Barney Dreyfuss of the Pittsburg club is very much amused over the "rot" that has been published regarding the alleged controversy between "Algy" Chesbro and "Pop" Anson as to the ability of the latter to hit the spit ball. "I don't believe that Chesbro ever said half of the things that he has been quoted with saying," remarked Colonel Dreyfuss the other day. "Chesbro is not that kind of fellow. It is only justice to him that makes me say that he is a modest lad who does not boast and who seldom talks merely for the pleasure of hearing himself say something."

Very likely this controversy is another that has been carried on by press agents alone, and Chesbro might be greatly surprised if he were to be confronted with some of the statements credited to him.

THE PIMLICO RACE TRACK.

Pimlico race track, at Baltimore, famous in turf history for more than a generation, was sold at auction recently under a court order to William P. Riggs, representing the Maryland Jockey club, which was reorganized last summer. The purchase price was $70,000. Owing to the announcement that the property would be offered in lots as well as in its entirety there had been fears that the track would go out of existence. These are set at rest by the result of the sale, previous to which the property belonged to the Maryland Agricultural and Mechanical association.

CHAUFFEURS' UNION.

Philadelphia chauffeurs are forming a union. Candidates for admission will be required to pass rigid examinations. It is not at present the intention of the union chauffeurs to dictate wages, hours or perform like acts which have become synonymous with labor organizations. The present movement has in reality much good in back of it. Tired of suffering from the reckless driving of some operators knowing little of their work, the Philadelphia union will issue licenses to only those in every way qualified to run motor vehicles. Will the idea spread to other cities?

C. K. G. BILLINGS.

While it is to be regretted that C. K. G. Billings is to abandon the turf for a season, it seems that the many articles devoted to his retirement are out of place.

No one having as much genuine love for the trotter and pacer as Mr. Billings will be content to remain away from the turf for more than a season. The fact that he is to retain some of his horses is an indication that he has no intention of abandoning the sport entirely, and, as a matter of fact, he has not declared that he will, although some of the turf writers infer that such is the case.

According to present plans Mr. Billings will pass next season in Europe, and naturally he will dispose of the greater part of his stable previous to his departure. By the time he returns some of the colts out of his noted race mares will be old enough to rekindle the love for the trotter he has so often demonstrated he possesses. If the latter should be lucky enough to make a phenomenal showing in their early years it is not unnatural to suppose that he will feel like continuing the breeding operations he commenced by force of circumstances. Admirers of the trotter will hope so and will expect that such mares as Lucille, 2:07; Louise Jefferson, 2:09¼; Imogene, 2:11¼; Fanny Foley, 2:19¼, and Mazette, 2:04¼, will produce youngsters capable of adding fame and luster to any breeding establishment in the world.

With the speed and breeding that these mares have the fact that they have received the best of care and have never been overtrained should make them the best matrons in the world. It would seem, indeed, that they have had the best preparation in the world for the purpose of fitting them for the harem, and the public will feel that as a breeder his genuine love for the trotter will be the best guarantee that they will have all the chance in the world to demonstrate their ability to produce the best colt trotters this country has ever seen. It is safe to say that the breeders are as anxious [illegible] have Billings continue as a breeder as the public in general is to have him continue to take an active interest in matinee racing.

FRANK DANIELS, COMEDIAN.

Frank Daniels has once more caught the fancy of fun loving theater goers, this time with the English musical comedy importation, "Sergeant Brue." His engagement at the Knickerbocker theater has proved one of the most successful of the New York season.

NEW FRENCH PLAY.

"Le Monsieur Parti," a drama in four acts by Maurice Maindron, author of "St. Cendres," was produced at the Theatre Antoine, in Paris, recently. This first dramatic effort includes the color, talent and effectiveness which please in M. Maindron's historical romances. Its theme is the assumption that the best way to deal with women is not to win by persuasion, but to proceed abruptly. Costumes and scenery were gorgeous.

THE GIANTS' BATTERS.

McGann leads the New York Nationals in batting with a percentage of .444 and a fielding average of 1.000. Devlin stands next in batting with .386, and Dahlen is third with .344. Mertes, Mathewson, Bowerman and Gilbert come next in the order named, with averages over .300.

DRAMATIC TALK.

Albert Parr, the tenor in Raymond Hitchcock's support in "The Yankee Consul," has fallen a victim to the Boston terrier craze. Mr. Parr owns a farm in the Thousand Islands district and has decided to make this handsome breed of pet dogs popular in Canada.

A clergyman who recently visited a theater where Lillian Mortimer was presenting her "Girl of the Streets" was so pleased that he wrote, "The story told is of remarkable strength, and the moral that it draws is so convincing that it must make its influence felt even upon the most depraved."

Eleanor Robson, whose portrayal of Kate Hardcastle in the all star production of "She Stoops to Conquer" is said to be the most artistic work of her unusually successful career, will have a new play next January. Until that time she will use "Merely Mary Ann."

One of the most novel of the musical numbers in "The Earl and the Girl" is a song entitled "A Little Lady In Distress," because of a pebble in her stocking.

Dorothy Donnelly, who creates in Boston the role of Helen Norton in "On Satan's Mount," is to star next season in the dramatization of "In the Bishop's Carriage" under the title of "The Little Lady in Gray."

Jess Dandy in Henry W. Savage's "Prince of Pilsen" company has a topical song which is demanded so persistently that the comedian often has to decline further encores from sheer exhaustion.

"The System of Dr. Tarr and Professor Fether," by Edgar Allan Poe was first dramatized by a Frenchman, André de Lorde by name. The American dramatization, which was presented in Boston recently, is a farce pure and simple and written solely to amuse, as its brilliant author intended.

Just as soon as "The Yankee Consul's" season ends Wm. Danforth, Joseph M. Ratliff and J. E. Hazard will go on a fishing trip to Maine. Ratliff will act as guide for the party. As their friends should bid them a long farewell, as their trip bids fair to be longer than Al Sheehan's voyage to Australia.

Mrs. LeMoyne will play in "A Blot in the 'Scutcheon," the role of [illegible] Tresham, originated in 1843 at the Drury Lane London, by the great Helen Faucit.

It has been said of Alexander Clark, the attenuated comedian with "The Earl and the Girl," that he [illegible] inexhaustible funds of humor. [illegible] right leg and the other in [illegible].
